After dinner there was a fine program and good speaking. Gatherings like this bring the whole community into closer fellowship and make for the good of all.

STANFORD MAKES READING AN ART IN NEW COURSE

PALO ALTO, Cal. (UP)—Marked improvement in the grades of students enrolled in a new reading training course has been announced by instructors at Stanford university.

First steps in the course are elaborate photographs of the student's eyes, taken while he reads. The length of pause, regressions, winks and movements of any kind are recorded. Then the photographs are thrown upon a screen and the student is told how to correct his errors.

Too many movements of the eyes and regressions are the chief obstacles encountered, instructors say. One of the ways devised to overcome these faults is a mechanical pacer, a device comparable to a metronome. A rhythmical beat is established and the student adjusts his eye movements from line to line in time with the pacer.

Another way to develop more rapid reading, instructors say, is for the student to time himself when reading an article, then to reread it with a view to increasing speed. Although much will be missed at first the individual will soon find himself reading more rapidly and retaining more of what he reads, Stanford professors assert.

Reading for phrases and ideas instead of looking at separate words is advocated by the instructors as a means of increasing speed and accuracy in reading.

BALD PATE CURE MAJOR BUSINESS IN PHILADELPHIA

PHILADELPHIA.—(UP)—The art of coaxing shiny pates to sprout hair is one of Philadelphia's major businesses.

Sensitive bald-headed men walk furtively into hair-growing salons and spend $1,000,000 yearly in this city, according to a survey, either to prevent baldness, to grow new hair, or to buy a wig.

Sixteen establishments advertise experts who will more or less guarantee a rebirth of hirstute glory. Pessimistically, 18 places do a thriving business in supplying artificial pompadours.

There are 41 kinds of mixtures which range in odor from lilac to burning rubber. Thousands of bald pates are submitted to rubbers, massagers, brushers, thumpers, kneaders, vibrators, bakers and steamers.

Every 12 months, 500 baldheaded men pay an average of $85 for courses averaging 20 treatments.

Wise businessmen realize that baldheaded men are human, and extremely sensitive. Almost without exception the hair-raising establishments are located in large office buildings, where the timid can pretend their business is with an adjacent insurance or brokerage office.

Only in one of the sanctuaries for the hairless will the baldheaded man, or the potentially shorn, find sympathy, understanding and hope. There he finds his brethren. Pleasant, professional appearing young men encourage him and attractive young ladies massage his cranium, and make no flip remarks.

One of the biggest places in town spikes the popular belief that only aged playboys and middle-aged actors take their baldness seriously. The records show that the average age for patrons there is 26, the youngest 18 and the oldest 72.
