'FRUIT GYPSIES' SERIOUS PROBLEM FOR CALIFORNIA

ing someone to blame," Dr. Taylor declares.
A start has been made to provide camps with ground and sanitary facilities, but without shelter, to improve the living conditions. One was established near Marysville and a second at Arvin in Kern county. A chain of 20 of these has been projected and federal financing probably will be sought.
Workers Needed.
It is agreed that the state cannot get along without its hosts of migratory workers, many of whom starve the year's work in February in the Imperial valley and work northward with the season. Many of them go as far north as Oregon and Washington on the northward trek and much of the southward movement overflows into Arizona, Texas and Oklahoma.
Employment, however, is intermittent, despite the constant moving and a common estimate among employers and observers of the annual earnings of migrants is between $350 and $500.
The social service division reports that due to the shrinkage in agricultural income, wages have dropped to a point where it is no longer possible for the migratory worker to sustain himself during the months of forced idleness.
As a result "there is a growing consciousness that for many of their kind the future portends not progress from generation to generation, but retrogression," Dr. Taylor concludes.

Lumbering Wages Held Unchanged

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 19.—(AP)—The basic wage scale of fifty cents an hour for lumber workers in 4-L camps will continue unchanged, the 4-L board of directors decided today.

The board of the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen unanimously reaffirmed the 50-cent scale agreed last May, and said it would be maintained despite the Canadian-American trade agreement which has cut by 30 per cent the lumber import excise.

With a cast of screenland's favorite comedy players, "It's in the Air," playing tomorrow only, matinee and evening, at the Craetrian theater, also tomorrow night only at the Holly theater, is practically assured of a more than the usual amount of hilarity.

Jack Benny, who recently scored a triumph in "Broadway Melody," is cast in the role of a professional "chiseler" who, with his sidekick, Ted Healy, are being chased by a G-Man because they failed to pay their income tax. Upon the advice of a shyster lawyer, Nat Pendleton plays the part of the G-Man.

In an effort to escape capture, Benny and Healy tie themselves to a desert resort, where they masquerade as "stratosphere experts" until they find themselves being taken seriously and are the recipients of an offer to make a flight for advertising purposes. Benny's wife, played by Una Merkel, knowing the chiseling proclivities of her husband, refuses to have anything further to do with him and, to win her back, the "gas bag expert" decides to really go through with the stunt, resulting in one hilarious situation after another, until finally everything is brought out all right for all concerned.

Byrd Expedition Pictures Appear On Rialto Screen

Actually made as a scientific expedition, Admiral Richard E. Byrd's conquest of "Little America," barren Antarctic wastes, nevertheless proves itself one of the greatest adventures ever attempted in modern times.

The photographic record of the expedition, which opens at the Rialto theater today for a three-day showing, shows the dangers the little band, under command of Admiral Byrd, had to face as an everyday task—a part of their job. It shows, with such forceful vividness as to make it felt thoroughly, the battle against the elements—the icy blasts that continually tried to wreck any undertakings that were attempted. It shows the crew trying to tie down the giant Concord plane, and almost losing it; the re-discovery of Little America, home of first expedition; the polar expedition across the ice packs; the crashing of the plane as it tries its flight from Little America; the arrival at the weather base where Byrd stood his legs while the giant Concord plane, orders—when communications failed; and the thousand and one other dramas which, together with life's little comedies in the "capital of the unknown," made the expedition crew's existence one exciting adventure after another.
