TRACK FORGERS CONVERT LOSING BETS INTO CASH LONDON-(UP)-A special squad of Scotland Yard detectives has been formed to break up a gang of forgers who have been reaping a rich harvest on the dog racing track here.

The forgery plot, the extent of which cannot be determined, first was suspected when a 10-shilling note taken at the dog racing track was found to have been altered.

The ticket itself was genuine and had been issued by the machine. It was presented and payment of substantial odds was made.

The ticket was taken to Scotland Yard's crime laboratory, where an ultra-violet ray lamp revealed that the number of the dog inscribed on the ticket had been cleverly changed from 3 (a loser) to 5 (the winner of the particular race).

The first number had been chemically erased and the new number printed over with ink practically the same as that used in printing the ticket originally.

It was the work of master forgers, marked by speed, audacity and skill. The ticket must have been altered in less than a quarter of an hour, the interval between races.

In view of the difficulty of finding a suitable corner on a dog track to carry out such a change, the detectives are convinced that they are dealing with a gang of geniuses equipped with pocket forgery sets and well supplied with capital.

A careful examination has revealed hundreds of forged tickets on which money has been paid out, but only in cases of dogs winning at long odds.

PRINCETON PLANS UNIQUE TYPE OF COLLEGE LIBRARY

PRINCETON, N. J.-(UP)-A new type college library, designed to bring into closer contact the students, faculty and books, is revealed in the plans for the Princeton university library.

The plans, made public by Dr. Harold Willis Dodds, president, call for a tall central tower which will contain the book stacks. The tower will be flanked by three-story wings housing the departmental headquarters of the humanistic and social departments.

To the students of English, classics, modern languages, philosophy, Oriental languages, history, politics and economics, the library will be as much of a laboratory as that of a scientist.

Plans for the English department are typical. Offices of the members of the faculty are adjoining; study rooms for students have individual desks, small rooms for conferences and preceptors, and a lounge for relaxation and informal discussions are included.

A small kitchen adjoins part of the central tower where English books are kept.

In his announcement of the accepted plans, President Dodds said: "The new library will make physically possible the goal toward which the university is directed: That the student may enjoy and profit fully from his association with faculty and books."

It will be the educational center of the university, the great meeting place of students and teachers, with every facility for them to become acquainted with each other in normal daily association.

The library will be constructed of variegated Princeton stone, the material used in modern dormitories and other campus buildings. Charles K. Lauder of Philadelphia is the architect.

The building is being built as one of three items on Princeton's $7,500,000 program of development. The other two endowments are for scholarship and for the school of public and international affairs.

HUNGER PICKET AT WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18-(AP)-A discharged navy sailor camped himself, with his wife and two children, in front of the White House today on Pennsylvania avenue to protest an announced intention of letting a president "see an average American family starve to death."

He advised newspaper offices in advance of his determination to stay there until he starved to death or got a job.

The man gave his name as Lewis Vincent Farrell of Philadelphia. He complained that he could not get a job until his navy record was changed and could not get a hearing on his record.

He said there was a "slanderous" statement in his record.

"I could get a job all right," he said, "if they would fix up that statement."

Farrell and the family were un-noticed by many passing people and sat calmly by the fence along the avenue.

PEDESTRIANS FARE WORST IN MISHAPS ON ENGLISH ROADS LONDON-(UP)-Pedestrians are by far the most frequent victims in road accidents in England. This fact is revealed in the chief constable's official report just issued. Other surprising disclosures are that only 4 per cent of those killed are drivers of vehicles and that in 33 per cent of fatalities the speed of the vehicles is under 20 miles an hour. The report covers the results of inquiries into 1,600 fatal cases. Of that total, vehicles killed pedestrians in 842, and 403 deaths were due to collisions. There were 918 accidents on straight roads or open bends with a good sight line. While the percentage of pedestrians killed was 85.9, and bicycle riders 20 per cent, the percentage of drivers was only 4.8. Of the pedestrians killed, 30.2 per cent were under 18, and 49.9 per cent were 45 and over. The people who cause the accidents, according to the chief constable, are: pedestrians, 49.1 per cent; drivers, 23.1 per cent, and pedal cyclists, 15.9 per cent.
