

TURKEY GROWERS TAKING INTEREST IN OAKLAND SHOW

Turkey growers of the entire northwestern and Pacific coast territory are making arrangements to attend and compete in the annual northwestern turkey show at Oakland, Ore., scheduled for Dec. 9 to Dec. 14.

Turkey growing as an industry has become increasingly important in the Rogue River valley during the past few years, according to Robert Fowler, county agent.

There's no limit to possibilities of this region as a turkey-producing unit," stated Mr. Fowler.

Most important among recent improvements locally has been along the line of management and feeding.

Direct contrast to the old inefficient system of selling birds at the special seasons whether or not they were ready, has been replaced by organization which provides for the holding of turkeys until they are at full weight and growth.

Birds are shipped by both truck and train, many of them to buyers in the east.

Mr. Fowler urged all local growers to attend the show at Oakland, stating that a great deal of valuable information may be gained concerning all phases of turkey growing and management.

Mr. Fowler stated that the total number of carloads for this year is estimated at 25 by Mr. Fowler.

Old "Barnaby Rudge" is dead. His great old head which carried him through 14 years in the field, pointing out birds for his master, Jim Murray, yesterday morning found the going too hard and he died, gazing at his owner gladly, and feebly wagging his gallant old tail.
