The Poet's Corner

By Mae MacKinnon. A jagged rock upraised 'Gained the apex of the sky's ethereal blue Scared and rem by time And Winter's blast and rime, Eons past has stood Mirrored in Diamond Lake's clear expanse.

By Mae MacKinnon. Around whose primeval forested In Winter, mystic silence ever broods. Snow clad your heights in Spring And the North wind flings A misty veil of fog about your crown. Down your rugged sides, brooklets come tumbling down. And beautiful flowers awaken at your feet.

By Mae MacKinnon. Your scarred old head is bathed in heavenly light As the Summer sun's last rays enfold you In one last lingering rose glow, when day is done.

By Mae MacKinnon. There's a cabin on the Rogue To which my heart will ever turn And though in distant lands I roam For that spot I'll ever yearn. My little cabin on the Rogue!

By Mae MacKinnon. Oh, little cabin on the Rogue! The pines above you sing an anthem. While I'm sailing o'er the billowy deep In fancy I can hear them. My little cabin on the Rogue!

By Mae MacKinnon. Sturdy little cabin on the Rogue! The winter's blasts about you blow. But when Spring comes through again The lovely flowers about you grow. My little cabin on the Rogue!

By Mae MacKinnon. Lonely little cabin on the Rogue, I can see your windows all aglow When I come back to you again As the evening sun sinks low. My little cabin on the Rogue!

By Mae MacKinnon. Oh, little cabin on the Rogue! When again I hear the honing call I know you will always welcome me In your lovely spot beside the fall. My little cabin on the Rogue!
