3 ESCAPE DEATH AS AUTO PLUNGES OFF K. F. HIGHWAY

The three occupants extricated from the wreckage and found that, by a near-miracle, none had suffered more than a few minor cuts and bruises.

With Yorton driving, the car which had been following the one occupied by Mrs. Yorton and Mrs. Pittman and children, met another on the curve. Yorton was momentarily blinded by the headlights and, according to accounts of the accident, applied his brakes. The car immediately went into a skid, plunging off the embankment.

The trio were taken back to Klamath by a passing autoist and made the trip to Medford on Christmas day by bus.

KLAMATH FALLS, Dec. 26.—(AP)—Ditched automobiles cluttered the roadside of this section. Christmas eve and Christmas day as light rain turned to thin ice on pavements. Higher temperatures today had melted the hazardous coating.

Only one mishap resulted in serious injury. Christy Bonomo, CCC youth from the Klamath camp at Merrill, sustained fracture of the skull when hit by a car driven by Alex Gooding, Olene farmer. Bonomo was walking along South Sixth street in Klamath Falls at the time of the accident. Gooding was not held.

Several cars were ditched along the Greensprings highway between here and Astoria.

Occasional showers, but no snow, provided Klamath's Christmas weather program. Similar conditions extended today.

"Three Musketeers" Coming Sunday

"All for one, and one for all!" From the lips of his fighting heroes in "The Three Musketeers," Alexandre Dumas, in an inspired moment, shouted the perfect slogan for devoted comradeship—as fine a summation of loyalty and consecration as ever was coined.

For millions of readers it has chimed in the minds after they have folded the covers of the book, and it rings again with high thrill of challenge and peril in the picturization of the tale, as shouted by d'Artagnan, Athos, Portos and Aramis, respectively played by Walter Abel, Paul Lukas, Moroni Olsen and Onslow Stevens, as they set forth on their great adventure.

The mutually protective fidelity of the "Musketeers" has probably influenced the covers of the book, and it round than all the academic essays on friendship ever written, and it is because of this central theme of selfless devotion that the romantic tale has been considered admirable entertainment for juveniles as well as adults.

All the glamour of undying loyalty, love affairs, thrilling rapier duels, and high court intrigues have been preserved in the historic Dumas novel.

Heather Angel, Margot Grahame, Rosamond Pinchot, Ian Keith, Miles Mander, Murray Kinzell, John Qualen, Ralph Forbes and Nigel de Bruiler are in the cast.
