

The House That Belongs Where It Is

A house that "seems to belong just where it is" is shown today. Its lines are full of grace and quiet dignity. The roof is of cedar shingles, with walls of hand-split cypress shingles all left to weather. Trim is white, shutters dark green. In the living room, the walls and paneling are painted a dark greenish blue, with hangings of white chintz with pink flowers. Wide spruce boards for the floor are painted a dark brown.

The plan is a flexible one, its designer points out. If the first floor of the main part only is finished, there are three rooms and a bath to start with. Thereafter, one bedroom and a bath may be finished upstairs, then another bedroom, and last of all, the dining room wing may be added. Charles S. Keefe is the architect, and the house is one of a series of distinguished small homes appearing in "Architecture."

Beautiful View Dictated Plan

The general arrangement of the plan of this dignified Ohio home was dictated by the fact that there was a beautiful view in one direction toward the rear. Outside woodwork is cypress, finished with a dark brown stain. The roof is of hand-split shingles. The stucco is a light buff. An interesting detail is the combination of pantry and breakfast room opening out upon the end porch. A feature of the interior is the two-story living room, with adjoining book alcove. Both are faced with vertical chestnut boards, burned with a torch and waxed. Floors are of plank in random widths, showing the wooden pegs. Between the ceiling beams, the plaster is of a cream tone, slightly antiqued. There are three bedrooms, a bath and plentiful closets on the second floor, despite the fact that the height of the living room takes away a considerable portion of the second floor area. Charles F. Cellarius is the architect, and the house is one of a series of distinguished small homes appearing in "Architecture."

Planting Suggestions for GARDEN LOVERS

All the family can join in the delight of growing a garden... and certainly all the family will profit by its completion, and revel in its beauty. For the children there will be outdoor play and sunshine, and the most beautiful way to learn of the wonders of nature. For the grown folks there will be exhilarating exercise and the delight of creating growing things. Make yours a gardening family, and you will have a healthier, happier family than ever!

The Outdoor Living Room

small lot can have just as attractive surroundings as the biggest estate in the land; in fact, some of the very prettiest and most tasteful planting in the country today are to be found surrounding homes of modest size.

The humble cottage and stately mansion both need a setting of growing things to attain their full beauty, and both suffer equally as much by the lack of well-planted, well-cared-for grounds.

One of the most important assets to a home is an outdoor living room. In place of an open rear yard within the view of everyone, the home owner should plan a private outdoor living room. Here one may enjoy the sunshine, and work among shrubbery and gay flowers out of the sight of prying eyes. Let the turf provide a green carpet; plant beautiful trees, shrubs and evergreen to make the walls which set the room apart and screen it from view.

Plant hardy flowers along the borders to provide fragrance and color. Then locate a few trees to provide comfortable shade and fruit. Altogether, one may have a room as delightful as anything one could dream of, a room which will give countless hours of enjoyment, health and satisfaction.

Plant Tuberos - Rooted Begonias

There is no doubt but that gardeners generally find themselves rather wary of venturing into the culture of tuberous-rooted begonias, because of their delicate waxy beauty, and the fact that they usually come to the attention of the gardener as a conservatory-grown pot plant.

The truth of the matter is that the tuberous-rooted begonias, started from the rounded-bottom, flat, and concave-topped hairy tubers, may be grown with no more difficulty than the gladiolus out in the garden bed.

The tuberous-rooted begonia loves a cool spot in a very light, leafy, open and well-drained soil, shaded from the hot afternoon sun.

Tubers may be sprouted indoors anytime from January to April. The best method is to place them in shallow boxes filled with a compost consisting entirely of imported peat and sand, or a mixture of one part each of light loam, imported peat, and a half part of coarse sand.

There are two points the amateur gardener must bear in mind in connection with the sprouting tubers: first, not to cover the crown or top of the tuber until it has sprouted and developed leaves; second, water very sparingly until the tubers start into growth.

Once sprouted and the leaves developed, the gardener has the option of either planting the tubers into 4 or 5-inch pots, according to the size of the tuber, in a very light but rich soil compost, or of planting them directly out into the garden bed in a situation to their liking.

The tubers planted in pots should be transplanted into the next larger size as soon as the roots reach the side of the pot before they get pot-bound, the main point being not to over-pot and to pot them moderately firm. It is advisable not to put them in a spot where they will be subject to a forcing heat, for they make sturdier growth under moderate temperatures.

Potted plants or outdoor plants should be treated alike insofar as pinching off the first buds. While it is difficult for a gardener to do this in view of the anxiety to see the first flowers open out in their full glory, still the sacrifice at this stage will prove very worth while, especially if weak liquid manure is fed to the plants at least once a week.

When the plants have finished blooming, they should be watered sparingly, and after the stems have fallen off, water should be withheld entirely. The crowns or tops of the tubers should be dried carefully by exposure to a dry atmosphere for a few days and by protection from eve-

Flowers for Fragrance

Some of our less attractive garden flowers are prized for their fragrance. Undoubtedly nature thus compensates for their lack of beauty. The lavender, the mignonette, and the evening scented stock (Matthiola Bicornis) are examples.

The fragrant flowers may be the more enjoyed if only more frequently planted in the garden bed directly under windows, or in the porch or window box.

We do have some very gay and pretty fragrant flowers adapted to the window or porch box; the sweet alyssum, the dwarf candytuft, the new sweet-scented double nasturtiums and the balcony petunias.

Among the sweet-scented garden flowers with stems suited to cutting are carnations, frezias, scabiosa, stocks, sweet peas, sweet sultans, sweet williams and wallflowers. All of these varieties are easily grown from seed.

A New Model Vegetable

There was awarded a gold medal by the All-American Selecting committee to a new model of an old-time vegetable—a 1935 cucumber named "Straight Eight." All of the fruits of this new cucumber grow very straight and approximately 8 inches long, thus living up to their name. When ready for use the diameter of this ideal slicing variety is about 1 1/2 to 2 inches, and the color rich deep green without objectionable striping.

A fine crop of cucumbers may easily be grown in an open, exposed, fairly rich soil. Planting should be delayed until all danger of frost is past. The soil for planting should be warm, fairly moist, and loose. The seed must be covered about one-half inch deep. Plant in hills 3 to 5 feet apart, dropping six or eight seeds to each hill. When the seedlings plants reach a height of about 6 inches, it is best to thin to three in a hill.

COUGHLIN'S RADIO DEMAGOGUERY HIT BY YALE 'PREXY'

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 22.—(AP)—President James Rowland Angell of Yale today termed it "utterly ridiculous" that teachers in certain states are required to take oaths of loyalty while a "recently naturalized foreign priest," not under a similar obligation, is allowed to broadcast "inflammatory social nonsense."

Dr. Angell contended that if teachers' oaths have any result at all they "render teachers timid about mentioning current political issues which properly should engage their best thought."

The Yale president did not identify the priest in his address prepared for delivery to some 2,500 graduates here for the annual university alumni day.

"Consider the utterly ridiculous condition," he said, "which compels President Conant of Harvard, under the Massachusetts law as it now stands, to take such an (teachers' loyalty) oath, while at the same time it allows a recently naturalized foreign priest to escape such an oath and pour out weekly over the radio, under the blessed name of social justice, the most poisonous and inflammatory economic and social nonsense."

GOOD GARDENING. 4. Transplanting. In transplanting plants from seed boxes or hot beds to the garden it isn't necessary to operate in the dark of the moon; nevertheless it's bad to attempt the business on a clear hot day. If you must do it in the sunlight, select late afternoon, rather than morning. Try to dig up the plant with a trowel, spade or spade fork—without losing the ball of earth around the roots. If you fail, stick the roots in a ball of clay mud before transplanting. Provide shade for the plant afterward and be sure to push the soil well in place. Whenever possible put leaf mould around the transplant. It will provide humus. Tomorrow—Fertilizer.
