Hooked River bridge on The Dalles-California highway (U. S. No. 97) was the highest arch span in the world—304 feet—when it was built several years ago. It comes as rather a breath taking surprise to many speeding across the flat plateau country traversed in this region by the highway. Eastern and Central Oregon have many attractions for the traveler or week-end tourist in winter as well as summer time. It is pointed out by the Travel and Information Department of the Oregon State Highway Commission.

Justifies Germany

Attending the League of Nations Council at London as special ambassador of Adolf Hitler, Joachim von Ribbentrop (above) charged that Germany was "forced" to denounce the Locarno Pact and move troops into the Rhineland because of the signing of the Franco-Soviet treaty. CHATTERBOX with PHILLIPS HOLMES ERIK RHODES rather decrepit looking scow on which he travels up and down the river, stopping here and there to put on his "museum show" for the edification of the river folk and to raise enough money to save his young nephew, John McGuire, from the gallows. Anne Shirley, as the swamp girl "Fleety Belle," is Will's chief pilot while his engineer, Francis Ford, is a hard-drinking river man who takes the pledge through the preaching of the "New Moses" played by Berton Churchill—only to find solace in some of the old patent medicines Will still carries with him. With Eugene Pallette as the kindly sheriff, they make a grand group of characters who, with the able, or should we say unable assistance of Stepin Fetchit, carry the film to a hilarious and thrilling conclusion.

Mae West Picture Scores With Large Craterian Crowds

Mae West came to town yesterday, and in her latest lesson in how to "get your man," "Klondike Annie," she proceeded to hand out the wisecracks and keep Victor McLaglen at a proper distance until the right time. The picture is at the Craterian theatre where it will play until tomorrow night.

It starts out in San Francisco—the old Frisco of the Barbary Coast days. Mae is the "Frisco Doll," rushing off to the Klondike on big, burly McLaglen's boat, trying to escape the police who are hot on her trail. Vic falls for the blonde in a big way, and urges her to marry him but Mae, having found a way to fool the police by appearing as an evangelist, prefers the company of handsome young Phillip Reed, a federal agent who has been assigned to locate the missing gambling-house gal and bring her back to San Francisco.

Evangelist Mae's revival meetings are the talk of the Yukon—torch songs, chorus numbers and everything that goes to make a song-and-dance production—all of which gives the star a chance to put over some new songs in typical West style. But all is not gold that glitters—even in the Yukon—and she finally turns down the offer of marriage to Reed, feeling it would be unfair to him, and accepts the proposal of Captain Vic. They're so much better suited to each other, she figures, they both want a mate who will make a good sparring partner and with each other they both get what they want.

With a racy tang throughout, "Klondike Annie" is Mae West—and that would probably be the best way to describe it. It has the West gag lines, the West song numbers presented in West manner, and the West type of romance that first abetted her to fame on the screen in "She Done Him Wrong."
