ARMORY BUILDING PLANS MUST WAIT FEDERAL FUNDING

SALEM, March 30.—(AP)—The armory building program in Oregon is unchanged since no funds for the proposed projects as listed from dispatches from Washington has been made available, Major General Geo. A. White, commander of the national guard in the northwest, said.

"Presidential approval and the approval of the comptroller general for a group of armories was made late last year, since which time efforts have been centered on getting the necessary funds and authority to start actual construction," General White said.

"The situation has not changed in several months. There are no present indications that funds will be available in the near future for the armory program, although there are hopes remaining that some armories may be built later."

Brigadier General Thomas E. Rilea of Salem, president of the National Guard association of the United States, was enroute to Washington to urge an appropriation for armory projects over the nation.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—(AP)—A works progress administration compilation today showed 28 armory construction and repair projects with an estimated cost of $838,749 have been approved for Oregon to date.

Before work can start the Oregon works administration must determine priority of projects on the basis of availability of funds and whether the projects meet federal requirements.

No expenditures can be made on ten of the 28 projects until land is purchased. No federal money can be used for land acquisition.

The ten projects, all calling for new armories with community center features, are:

Pendleton, $46,370; Oregon City, $47,416; Astoria, $46,370; Forest Grove, $46,370; Lebanon, $46,370; The Dalles, $46,370; Baker, $46,370; St. Helens, $45,000; Grants Pass, $45,000.

Five Oregon National Guard armory construction projects on public or donated property are:

Gresham, Springfield, Union and Hillsboro, $25,000 each and Salem, $236,231.

Projects for repair, painting, and construction of additional facilities, all sponsored by the state, include:

Medford, $2744; Roseburg, $2738; Ashland, $1483.

Every watch repaired here is given the micrometer test. Jno. W. Johnson

SOVIET PROMISES AIDS TO MONGOLS

MOSCOW, March 30. (AP—A demand for immediate action to put an end to frontier raids was contained in a note from the government of outer Mongolia to the Manchoukuoan administration made public here tonight.

The official Russian press intimated a belief that the Japanese were instigating the critical situation along the border of Manchoukuo, set up as an independent state by Japan, and the Russian-advised republic of Outer Mongolia.

The Mongolian note was sent to Manchoukuo Friday, after resumption of border fighting, which the Mongolians declared resulted from an attempt by Japanese and Manchoukuoan troops to occupy a Mongolian frontier post in the Norin lake district.

ONCE MORE BACK TO JAIL

After the jury was discharged in his third trial on charges of murdering his young wife at their Stanford residence, David Lamson and his sister, Dr. Margaret Lamson, retired to his jail cell at San Jose, Calif., to talk the disagreement over. Lamson (right) and his sister are pictured as they re-entered the jail while a deputy sheriff stood guard. Lamson was convicted and sentenced to death in his first trial, but the juries in his second and third trials both disagreed 9 to 3 for conviction. Prosecutors will decide whether to try him again. Generous Friend Leaves Token on Mayor's Lawn

By Dick Applegate

R. O. Stephenson, chairman of the Democratic central committee, lumberman, prominent citizen and good friend of Mayor George Porter, is a generous man. Porter himself will swear to that, and will even mildly swear about it, if properly coaxed these days.

Recently Stephenson celebrated a birthday. Admiring friends, anxious to carry out the good fellowship motif, decided that he should get something by way of a token of their regard. Putting aside bickering among themselves, they decided unanimously that the present should be something useful, enduring, and decorative.

Nothing could be better, they decided, than one of Steve's own products—a handsome one room building now being built by Steve for the Works Progress Administration, in numbers, to be distributed to farmers in this community who are not yet equipped with the latest in sanitary innovations. A few years ago these attractive bungalow type buildings were to be seen in every back yard, but with the rush of modern civilization they have been rapidly displaced by more modern but less picturesque equipment.

Steve's friends were confident that this would be something that he would appreciate; something that, as the years rolled on and he had birthday after birthday, would survive to remind him of his old friends, old places, his days on the farm as a boy, the old swimmin' hole—wonderful memories.

The gift was not presented ostentatiously, as might have been done by less sincere admirers. Not interested in the acclaim that would be due them for their thoughtfulness, they were content in the knowledge that Steve would understand. They preferred, in fact, to remain anonymous.

Steve found the attractive building on his front lawn Saturday night. A handsome building she were, equipped with a brand new catalogue of facts and ready to be occupied.

To say that Mr. Stephenson was touched would be to risk the charge of understatement. He was almost moved to tears. As boyhood memories rushed through his head in disordered array (as per predictions) he bethought him of his old friend, Mayor Porter. What, thought Steve, would be a better token of my regard than to sacrifice this fine gift, and turn it over to George? Anxious lest his unknown benefactors be wounded at his departing from their offering, Steve decided to make his presentation in the dead of night.

So deftly were his plans executed that Porter was unaware of his bounty until, upon arising Sunday morning primed for a day's fast shooting at the Gun club, he spied it glittering in the early morning sun, proudly topping off the panorama from his front window.

Porters reaction was much as Stephenson could have wished for his old friend. So touched, in fact, was Medford's mayor that he could hardly concentrate on his shooting at the traps, missing frequently. It might have been his effort to hold back the tears of a touched man that gave him the seemingly hard, cold glint in his eye that morning.

Nobody seems to know. Steve does not mention it. He is, as Porters swears, a generous man.

Horrors of Chain Gang Known to Medford Man

A strange tale, which, although over 20 years old, is nevertheless startling in fact, was told Friday by Frommie McCasland, Medford PWA worker, in an interview with a Tribune reporter. McCasland is married, the father of six children, and has been a resident of Medford and vicinity for the past 16 years. He is employed on the PWA project at the McAndrews bridge across Bear creek.

"This story starts back in Illinois, when I was 16 or 17 years of age—about 1914 or '15. Both my parents were dead, and I was out on my own. I started on the road, traveling mostly by freight car.

"On my way from St. Louis, Mo., to Mobile, Ala., I and two companions were forced to get off the train near Meridian, Miss., by several men armed with guns and herded to a road work camp. I never knew exactly what official status these men held, but presume they were county officials of some sort.

"It was the custom to pick up all transients and vagrants and force them to work on the county roads without pay, a good way of getting work done without expense. The men were kept at work for from 60 to 90 days and then allowed to go on their way.

"The camp was conducted just like a prison camp. The men were housed in tents containing four mattresses. Two men were assigned to each mattress and chained to stakes inside the tent. In the mornings, we were unchained and fed and taken out on the road and were generally at work at sunup. Although we weren't chained while at work, several armed men stood guard at all times to see that none of us escaped.

"The food was—well, you could eat it and that's about all. Our meals consisted mainly of cornbread, beans and bacon.

"Finally, after I'd been working there about three weeks, I managed to escape through the brush. I didn't get very far before I was recaptured and brought back behind a horse and buggy with a rope around my neck. When they brought me into camp, I was lashed with a blacksnake whip, a weapon about 18 feet long. It was only with a great deal of pain that I was able to work for the next week and a half. The men standing guard over the road crews during the day time used to use these whips frequently if they decided someone was not working hard enough.

"Well, it was shortly after this that I made my second attempt to escape, which was even less successful than the first. I was wounded when one of the guards fired his shotgun at me. The men in charge of the camp took me to the county jail at Zeno, a small town about 20 miles from Meridian and near which we worked. They finally called a doctor and I was taken to the county hospital.

"Meanwhile, the overseers of the camp would come to see me in the hospital and try to persuade me to escape. It seems that the case had been brought into court, by whom or through what processes I never found out. Anyway, I guess they were kind of anxious for me not to appear in court. They told me that I'd better go, because if I was taken back to the camp I'd have to stay much longer than was usual. Well, the trial was postponed from the original date. Before the second date set came up, the men from the camp succeeded in scaring me so that I ran away.

"I knew that I didn't want to go back there, and decided not to take any chances on being put in a chain gang again. I got out of that section of the country as fast as possible and haven't been back since.

"I could say a lot more about it—such things as the vicious dogs trained to track and tree anyone attempting an escape, and the negroes elevated to superior positions over white men. But I guess that's enough. This is the first time I've ever told the story—I don't know why I didn't before. I guess I was so scared it stayed with me for a long time.

"All this is absolutely true. I'm sure the records of the county in which Meridian is located will verify my statements."

'EMPEROR JONES' MOST AMBITIOUS DRAMA BY SONS

First full dress rehearsal of the SONS production of Eugene O'Neill's "Emperor Jones" was held Thursday evening, and was characterized by those who saw it as going "very well." Angus L. Bowmer, director, states that this production will be by far the most spectacular yet presented by the SONS players.

Probably the most picturesque costumes are those of the southern ladies and planters in the slave market, the women wearing the old-fashioned hoop-skirts of that day. The Emperor himself wears brilliant red trousers and a blue coat with gold epaulets and other regal trappings.

Particular attention is being paid to the make-up of the negroes in the cast. While in southern California last summer, Director Bowmer had an appointment with a special Max Factor make-up expert, in which details of this production were discussed. Liquid make-up which presents a genuine "darky" complexion has been procured from Hollywood and the actors use hair-dye in order to complete the illusion.

O'Neill's hero is a negro convict, a one-time Pullman porter, crap-shooter, murderer, who escapes to the West Indies, calls himself Emperor, bleeds his native subjects until they rebel, chase him into the jungle and destroy him. With the use of a new medium in stage scenery, that of drapery, along with a complicated lighting system, Director and Mrs. Bowmer have produced a spectacular setting that is well-suited to the action and spirit of the show.

The supernatural atmosphere of the tropical jungle is effectively done with the employment of huge banyan trees, gnarled and hung with moss. During the series of six jungle scenes the different locations in the forest are exemplified by the varied arrangement of the trees, the tropical plants and many colored lights.

A chain gang, a slave market, a galley-ship crew and a Pullman porter, all imaginings of the Emperor's over-wrought conscience, appear to continually haunt him in his mad flight through the jungle. Deep in the forest at a weird hour of the morning, a native witch-doctor does an African devil-dance to induce Jones to repent and sacrifice himself to the river god, a crocodile who rears his ugly head from the river. From the time the Emperor abandons his palace and flees through the forest the jungle war drums beat incessantly until the end of the show.

Robert Steadman, prominent in SONS dramatics, plays the title role of Emperor Jones. With his large well-built body magnificently clad in the royal uniform and his naturally deep voice speaking the soft negro dialect, plus his appreciation for the role, Mr. Stedman is convincingly the Emperor.

Tickets for the production, to be presented April 3 and 4 at the normal school, may be obtained in Medford at The Toggery.

TOWNSENDITES TO GIVE 5C WEEKLY TO AID CAMPAIGNS

PORTLAND, Ore., March 30.—(AP)—Charles L. Paine, campaign manager for state Townsend club candidates, said the organization's war chest will be obtained through donations of five cents a week for six weeks by the entire state membership, which he estimated at 150,000.

Paine said he already had communicated with 400 clubs relative to the plan.

He opened a headquarters here last week. In answer to queries as to whether the endorsement of candidates was not against the avowed policy of Dr. Francis Townsend, Paine cited a telegram received last week from Hal Siemons of Los Angeles, regional Townsend director, saying, "Dr. Townsend here in office says go ahead and endorse candidates tomorrow."

The state area board announced its list Saturday.

Paine commented, "I believe all patriotic Townsendites will support the men selected by these boards, and I don't believe any Townsend candidate will run in opposition to those selected."

"There have been intimations that some might decide to run despite lack of endorsement," he continued. "We'll see whether they are true Townsendites or self-starters."
