

EDUCATORS DROP OLD MAXIMS FOR DIRECT METHODS

Dr. Redford Tells Teachers' Convention of Modern Aim in Character Guiding—Seek Specific Reaction

SPOKANE Wash., April 10.—(P)—Character-guiding maxims which virtually every pupil once learned at home or school are being discarded in modern education, 2,000 teachers were told at their institute Thursday.

Dr. Walter Redford, president of Southern Oregon Normal, Ashland, listed as an example the maxim:

"Politeness is to do and say the kindest thing in the kindest way." Such a teaching method is indirect, or inverted, he told the Inland Empire Education association. Educators now tackle the character-building in a more direct way.

"They begin with specific reactions," he explained. "The specific reaction would be objective through the illustration of a specific 'kindest thing' or 'kindest way' instead of through the maxim-memorizing process."

Dr. Samuel M. Mayfield of Linfield college, McMinnville, Ore., appealed for "specialists in non-specialization," in an address.

He discussed the "new Linfield plan," started in 1933.

"The plan was started with the idea this new age in which we live demands a new type of liberal arts and university training," Dr. Mayfield explained. "The college was turning its back on a commonly accepted elective plan which assumes that each high school graduate has found himself and knows both vocation and interests."

"The new plan assumes that all entering freshmen have identical needs, so that our old bogey of required subjects should not re-enter the field."

"The course gives the student just enough science to whet his appetite for more. But problems remain. We are making good progress, and I believe the course can be made to accomplish most of the things that its proponents have hoped for."

NORTH TO ORIENT HOLDS 1ST PLACE ON LIBRARY LIST

Ann Lindbergh's Work Remains Most Popular of Non-Fiction Volumes—Honey in Horn Favored

With her North to the Orient still greatly in demand, Ann Morrow Lindbergh continued to be the most popular author of non-fiction at the Medford public library in March, a tabulation disclosed today.

Among the works of fiction Davis Honey in the Horn advanced to the top of the list from sixth place in February. The Green Light and The Magnificent Obsession, both by Douglas, which led the list in February, dropped to second and third places, respectively, in March.

Allen's Anthony Adverse, which was the third most popular work of fiction the previous month, did not appear at all in the select list of the 15 most popular books in March. It Can't Happen Here, by Sinclair Lewis, which did not appear on the February list, occupied fourth place last month.

Gift Received

The American Legion auxiliary, which presents a gift to the library annually, this year gave a subscription to the American Magazine of Art, a monthly publication. The librarians said there had been considerable demand for the magazine and expressed their gratification for the auxiliary's generosity and thoughtfulness in making it available to the public. They said it would be extremely useful and helpful to students and others interested in art.

The new book list, soon to be published in full, contains these titles: Recipes of All Nations, by Countess Marcella Morphy; Contemporary American Women Poets, edited by Tooni Gordi, which is a gift to the library by Alice McClune Mitchell; Personal Pleasures, by Rose Macaulay; Farewell, by Phyllis Bentley; and We Soviet Women, by Mme. Tatiana Tchernavin.

ACTRESS SENDS LIBERAL HUBBY ALL HER WAGES

By ROBBIN COONS
HOLLYWOOD—Madeline Carroll, the blonde star from England, works for the sheer joy of working. And that, take her word for it, is a literal explanation.

She collects for herself some of the money she earns, making pictures. Every cent of it, she says, goes to her husband, Capt. Phillip Astley, back in England.

Quite casually, at lunch the other day, Miss Carroll revealed her odd marital agreement regarding finances. She was talking on happy film marriages, with the authority of one who has weathered four years of matrimony and insists there will be no second marriage for her.

Captain Astley is a wealthy English landowner, prominent in civic and charitable movements and in society.

Money Trade

"When we were married," relates Miss Carroll, "my husband made such a generous settlement upon me that I wanted to repay him with some gesture equally generous. I decided that all my career should go to him, and that is how we cooperate."

"I really don't care about money, personally. I like the feminine feeling of being taken care of by my husband. He pays my bills, attends to all financial matters, and I enjoy the freedom from worry over details like signing checks, balancing accounts, and all that. I really have no sense about money—when I'm in London I won't let him give me more than five shillings ($1.25) a week for pin money."

By now, what with Miss Carroll's successes on stage and screen, Mrs. Astley's "gift" to Capt. Astley has exceeded his to her.

Second Honeymoon

"Even the most nearly perfect man and woman," she explains, "can see each other too much. Ordinary human beings, therefore, no matter how much they love each other, need all the more the absence that makes the heart grow fonder. That is one of the reasons I like working part of the time in Hollywood—when I return home it is like a second honeymoon."

She is working currently in "The Case Against Mrs. Ames"—which is not an "epic," she affirms gratefully, with memories of her previous Hollywood film, "The World Moves On."

That picture was not the success its cost indicated. She made her return on the strength of the less pretentious, more popular English film, "The 39 Steps."
