MILLION DOLLARS CANNOT PURCHASE NEW GOLD STRIKE

Nevadans Hold Hope of Another 'Golden' Era—Raskop and Hoover Reported Interested in Discovery

RENO, Nev., Aug. 21.—(AP)—Desolate hills of the Blackrock desert region today brighten Nevada's hopes for another "golden" era of precious metal mining.

Reported interest of former President Herbert Hoover, John J. Raskop and the Goldfields of South Africa company in the new "strike" added to enthusiasm of mining men here. Talk of "million dollar" offers was heard and conservative mining men said they understood George B. Austin, owner of a mine already producing, could get as much as $1,000,000 for his property under certain conditions.

Austin, a rugged, six-footer, let it be known, however, after Mr. Hoover inspected the property recently, that his mine is not for sale.

C. C. Higgins, mining editor for the Reno Gazette, said he was informed by engineers that the ore deposits differ from others in the state, including those at Virginia City, which gave Nevada its first great boom, and at Tonopah and Goldfield, rich producers of more recent days.

Austin, who purchased his property for $500 down on a $100,000 price, now owns the mine from gold produced and milled by crude methods. He is building a mill of 30 tons daily capacity.

He extracted, as a test, in one day with mortar and pestle 12 ounces, approximately $420 worth of gold.

Austin, who for years operated a store at Jungo, on the Western Pacific railroad, 40 miles south of the mine, indicated he intends to keep it a family affair.
