

3 NEBRASKA BOYS UNDER QUIZ FOR MARSH ACCIDENT

Three Plainview, Neb., youths were in the county jail yesterday and their movements for the past three days were being checked by state police to determine if they had any connection with the watermelon hurrying episode which Thursday evening put Mrs. J. N. Marsh of this city in a hospital with a seriously slanted throat.

The three were Lloyd S. Seabury, 21, Lloyd K. Bonge, 20, and Gilbert P. Dickinson, 19. They were arrested Thursday night by state police on the south Pacific highway, and Seabury and Bonge admitted having passing cars but vehemently denied having hurled watermelon rinds. The three were hauled into Medford justice court yesterday morning and Seabury and Bonge pleaded guilty to charges of disorderly conduct. Dickinson pleaded guilty to a charge of driving an auto with void foreign license plates.

Seabury and Bonge were sentenced to serve 30 days in the county jail, and Dickinson was fined $10 and costs and given a 10 day jail term. A boy riding a bicycle along the highway south of Ashland reported having been fired upon with water pistols. The report was made to Ashland city police who notified state troopers. The 11-year old boy noted that the machine was a Ford sedan.

The Ashland Community hospital, where Mrs. Marsh was rushed following the crash, reported last night that she was improving rapidly and believed well on the way to recovery. She sustained a severed left anterior jugular vein, the thyroid gland on the right side of her throat was cut, and she had a deep gash on her right arm.

The youths have been living at an auto camp near Ashland.

SOS CREWS GIVEN ENERGY FOOD IN PRODUCTION TEST

Serving of energy food in mid-morning and mid-afternoon to maintain production at a uniformly high rate is being tried as an experiment at the packing plant of Southern Oregon Sales, Inc.

During the rest period from 10 to 10:15 each morning the employees are served a half pint of milk and three graham crackers. In the afternoon rest period from 3:15 to 3:30 they are served a chocolate bar, a bar of candy or a bag of salted peanuts. Other varieties of food also are to be tried in the afternoon to determine what gives the best satisfaction, it was explained by Shelby M. Tuttle, manager. The experiment, he said, has not been tried long enough yet to chart results.

"There is nothing philanthropic about the plan," Mr. Tuttle asserted. "It is a matter of cold business." "The same plan has met with success in many eastern industries. It has been found that production lags in mid-morning and mid-afternoon because of nutritional fatigue. Efficiency, it has been observed, picks up immediately when the employees consume a bit of food that can be digested quickly.

"In an attempt to prevent the usual slump in production, we consulted the company physician and he approved the food plan, specifying what foods would give the quickest and best results. The food is served under the supervision of Miss Edna Mae White, registered nurse on duty at the plant. Everything is ready for serving when the recess comes and service requires only two minutes. The efficacy of the plan cannot be determined fully until we reach peak production which will probably be next week."

Noted Mystic Will Give Lectures Here

"Usually," said the announcement, "her mind contacts the mind of her master directly and she is taught without words but it is not unusual to hear his voice speak actual words." Expenses for her work are provided by free will offerings, the announcement stated.

Growers and Shippers Become Modern Merchandisers Through AFG Service

Think over the big names in the staple food business today. They represent uniform merchandise supplied in volume under an advertised name. They point the way to successful merchandising of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Suppose you are a grower or shipper with a brand that is advertised in a limited way, having some trade and consumer acceptance. You can widely extend and increase that acceptance by adding the Blue Goose trade-mark endorsement to your present brand or label.

Suppose you have a good trade preference but no consumer recognition. By adding the Blue Goose trade-mark endorsement to your own label or brand, you can secure much wider trade preference, plus the acceptance of consumers the world over who know and appreciate Blue Goose as a quality emblem.

Suppose you neither brand nor advertise. The Blue Goose trade-mark added to your shipments will bring you, overnight, an already established trade and consumer acceptance.

When a grower or shipper, either independent or cooperative, adds the Blue Goose trade-mark endorsement to his brand and uses this name on the wraps, he is drawing to his own products at once the acceptance of consumers who know that Blue Goose goes on nothing but top grades. Even though the consumer may never before have seen the private brand, she accepts it as evidence of careful grading and highest quality because she knows Blue Goose. Applying as it does to a wide variety of fruits and vegetables, Blue Goose trade-mark advertising can continue steadily throughout the year. Blue Goose is never out of season. For this reason, it is unquestionably the best and most favorably known name associated with produce.

An alliance with American Fruit Growers Inc. means for a grower or grower group immediate access to every important market in this country and in foreign markets, best average profits through systematic marketing, and the full benefits of national advertising.
