

FUMES EXPOSE CRIME SECRETS, POLICE BELIEVE

PASADENA, Cal.—(UP)—The discovery by Dr. John McNorris, local chemist, of a new method for developing fingerprints is declared by police authorities to be the greatest contribution to crime detection since the original Bertillon experiments.

McNorris is one of a group of scientists who have placed their service and laboratories at the service of police for scientific detecting of criminals. They constitute a "brain trust" of scientific consultants who give their services free, but whose identity for the most part is concealed.

Under the new method it is possible to bring out latent fingerprints left on cloth, human flesh and greasy surfaces, all of which previously were impervious to fingerprinting attempts.

The new method, it is believed by the Pasadena police, will be valuable in detecting men who assault women and leave fingerprints on clothing and throats of their victims. Its secret is the use of iodine fumes, which are blown through what is known as a "Sherlock Holmes" pipe against the object on which the fingerprints are believed to exist.

The iodine fumes bring out prints, which originally were formed by the oil from finger pores, instead of by pressure of the finger ridges against a hard surface.

A silver mirror then is placed against these prints. When it is later removed and held to the sunlight, the transposed fingerprints appear in full detail. They then can be photographed and reproduced in whatever quantity desired.

Dr. McNorris says the discovery was really due to the fact that police officers first explained to him in detail the precise problem that exists in fingerprinting and this fact spurred him on to find the solution.

ONTARIO, Ore., Sept. 8.—(P)—A suggestion that "we catch the freight" cost the life of Delbert Steinhilber. He was crushed to death as his sister and "Blackie" Cavalier, a CCC enrollee, looked on. The three had been sitting in the station park. Coroner R. A. Tacke said he was investigating the mishap.

German technicians claim that they have developed a carbon black compound with the American product. The German product, which is based upon naphthalene is now in commercial production.

Spectacular Crash At Air Contest

Laugh At Their Crashes

Rudy Kling (left) of Lemont, Ill., and Joe Jacobson of Kansas City, just laughed at their narrow escapes from death or serious injury after planes they were flying were wrecked in crashes at the end of the Greve trophy race at the National Air races at Los Angeles. It was the second mishap for Jacobson, who escaped by parachute when the ship he was flying in the Bendix transcontinental race exploded over Kansas. — (Associated Press Photo.)

JAPAN OFFERS NEW COURTESY TO FOREIGNERS

TOKYO—(UP)—A new phase of Japan's foreign policy has developed with the insistence of officials that visiting foreigners be treated with greater courtesy and not subjected to the irritations of over-strict police surveillance.

The move commanded wide attention in the Japanese press and was started with a speech by Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita at the conference of prefectural governors.

"Complaints often have been heard among foreign travelers in Japan to the effect that they were subjected to unwarranted treatment, as a result of which they obtained an unfavorable impression of this country," Arita said.

"Such complaints have a regrettable effect on our foreign relations. Efforts are being made by the foreign office authorities to guide foreigners to a correct understanding of Japan, and I trust that local government officials and particularly policemen who come into direct contact with foreign visitors will cooperate with the foreign office in this direction.

"It is, of course, not necessary that special courtesy be extended to these visitors because they have come from foreign countries. However, on the other hand, to subject them to over-strict surveillance or to look at them with suspicion because they are foreigners, is not warranted.

"Rigorous measures should, of course, be taken in case they violate the laws of the land. However, to take such measures against them in the absence of concrete evidence does not conform to the greatness of the nation."

SALEM, Sept. 6.—(Special Correspondence).—The fairgrounds today presents a very hurried group of exhibitors frantically putting last minute touches to what observers say, is going to be a great fair should the photographer exhibit be a comparison of previous years the fair will be twice as large as ever before. The photos are much better with more photographers showing. Added to this is the beautiful Oregon camera club exhibit which makes me feel proud as a past member of that organization.

This evening the pre-opening crowds are milling around and on every side acquaintances are being renewed and among them yours truly spies Fletcher Fish, rushing along—temperature 100 or more—it appears his pears for the Jackson county exhibit weren't delivered to the fairgrounds, but for Fletcher, showman that he is, "The show must go on," and he finally has his beloved pears, hours late. It is now 8:30 p. m. he works feverishly and with the same high temperature, to complete the exhibit, which we feel sure will be very fine one even though he did refuse my suggestion of assisting him.

The art exhibit, occupying the other half of our building is a huge exhibit of fine work, and those in charge feel very proud of their part in the fair which will be thrown open tomorrow morning to an expected all-time record crowd.

The poultry exhibit in a nearby building housing those cackling and crowing birds, spur on the tired exhibitors, in fact, one would think it was early morning all day long, but after putting in the hour of labor I have today it's going to take more than a few enthusiastic fowls

M.C.P. Liquid FRUIT PECTIN

Makes Better Grape Jelly at 20% to 30% Less Cost!

Use This Tested Recipe - While Grapes Are Cheap

Wash and stem 4 lbs. ripe grapes, crush thoroughly, add small amount of water, and simmer in covered kettle until grapes are soft. Strain through a cloth and measure 4 1/2 cups of juice into an 8 quart kettle. Add 7 1/2 cups sugar (equals 3 1/2 lbs.) and bring to a boil. Add 1/2 can M. C. P. Liquid Fruit Pectin (equals 1/2 standard 8 oz. measuring cup), bring to a hard boil and boil 2 minutes. Skim and pour into scalded glasses. Cover with paraffin. Makes about 11 glasses of 6 fluid oz. size.

to keep me from having a good night's rest and being here bright and early tomorrow for the opening. Will try and ferret out something of interest tomorrow.
