Mr. Whitney wrote Father Coughlin March 24, requesting his indorsement of O'Brien as a candidate for U. S. senator. Coughlin investigated O'Brien and wound up by making the Bostonian his own personal candidate for vice-president.

Incidentally, Coughlin has not yet answered Whitney's letter, and has not approached Whitney with respect to the Union party, although he has been in Cleveland several times lately.

Those who remarked about the stupidity of sending Governor Landon to Maine have not said anything like that since the results were announced. Winners are always clever, losers always dumb.

Despite all the conflicting comment, the Maine result was just about what was expected. The accepted advance figure was a 40,000 majority for the Republicans, and the gubernatorial result hit the estimate exactly. Politicians can clock elections better than polls.

Some movie fans in eastern cities suspect both political parties are planting claque in the theaters to see that neither side gets the better of the applause from news reel sketches of the candidates in action.

A singular and healthy thing about current political comment is that most of the national commentators live in Washington, D. C., and do not have a vote.

The next Literary Digest poll will show Roosevelt gains, but Landon still leading.
