WORLD TRAVELER SPENDS LIFETIME HUNTING CURIOS

OLD MYSTIC, Conn.—(UP) Charles Q. Eldredge, veteran world traveler, who has celebrated his 91st birthday, is the sole owner and curator of the Eldredge Free Museum, which boasts of more than 7,000 items collected in the last 81 years.

Early in life Eldredge developed a mania for collecting things, and in 1917 he erected a separate building for his trophies and opened his free museum. Since that time, more than 60,000 persons have viewed the collection, while Eldredge himself has personally conducted 25,612 persons through the building.

The collector is as fond of entertaining as he is of collecting curios. He displayed his love of entertaining friends in 1891 when he returned to Old Mystic after engaging in the building business for 20 years, and built a large recreational center which he called Riverview. Hundreds of guests from Connecticut and neighboring states have used his bowling alleys, shooting galleries, and other amusements.

The museum houses as strange a collection as has ever been assembled. In front of it rests the bleached skeleton of a whale, 90 feet long, the gift of Capt. John C. Spicer of Groton, Conn., who caught it in Hudson Bay in 1879.

An enormous penguin greets the visitor just inside the door. It came from Cape Horn and the card around its neck is typical of the labels Mr Eldridge has placed on the exhibits. The card reads: "I am sure that you folks, like me, are close readers of the Bible, so you will remember that somewhere it tells about those who have ears and hear not and eyes and see not. Well, here is a bird which has wings and flies not."

Eldredge takes more pride in his souvenirs than in his natural history collection. He has what he believes is the first cannon ball fired against Fort Sumter, and he says that Edmund Ruffin, the fellow who fired that shot, also fired the last shot of the Civil War. When he heard that Lee had surrendered he shot himself through the head.

Some of his other prized items are a petrified cocoanut, which, he says, dates from 437 A. D. and was found during the digging of the Panama canal; a ship model built in a bottle and which won the world prize for that sort of thing in 1934; a petrified oyster weighing eight and one-half pounds which was found in South Africa in 1865; a piece of wood from the Confederate gunboat Merrimac; some wooden hinges used on a barn door for more than 200 years; an almost complete set of all commemorative coins issued by states or the federal government, and several thousand rare postage stamps.
