"Greed Must Be Stopped" Says Dempsey, Preparing To Stump For Roosevelt

JACK DEMPSEY

NEW YORK, Sept. 30. — (Sp.) — "The trouble here is that people are food on like they've been in Europe. What the hell is the cause of the trouble there? The moneyed people. The rich taking everything away from the poor."

Jack Dempsey said this today over a cup of cold borscht in his restaurant across from Madison Square Garden.

As he got more indignant, the former heavyweight champion began to talk like a socialist idealist. He was telling why he would make a two weeks' swing up-state October 1 to campaign "as a layman" for Roosevelt and Lehman.

"This communist talk about the New Deal is a lot of hooey. I don't know what a communist is. They don't patronize my place. But if keeping poor people from starving is being a communist, then I'm a communist."

"I've never made a speech in my life. I just talk straight out, like I feel." Indeed, he said, he had never heard a stump speech until he went to Maine to help his friend, Governor Brann.

"If a man makes a lot of money," Dempsey resumed, "why the devil shouldn't he pay? When people are starving, and women get only $10 a week that can't even buy their socks."

"This campaign has got down to capitalist-labor. I'm for the poor man and the farmer. I think the old age pension is a great thing."

"Certainly the moneyed men are against Roosevelt because he believes in one law for all people. The big shots want to get their own people in office so they can make special rules for themselves. But you don't see any banks broke any more and you don't see them watering that stock, do you?"

The Manassa Mauler finished his soft-shell crabs during momentary pauses. By this time he was downright mad about the talk about communism.

"You might as well call me a Bolshevik, and I hate the ground they walk on."

Dempsey says his restaurant was made possible by Roosevelt and Lehman, partly "because they had guts enough to tell how they stood on prohibition," and partly "because the country was in the hands of revolution when Roosevelt saved it."

"What the hell does London know about New York?" he demanded. "They can't even teach him to ride a horse out west."

When Dempsey opened his restaurant he received 100 letters a day for help. "No touches, just loans." Now three or four are the most he gets a day, and this has made a deep impression on the hobo who became world champion.

"I'm for the same thing as the Democratic party. That is, live and let live. Give everyone a chance for a livelihood. We'd have a revolution tomorrow if the WPA stopped."

Not a Politician.

"You see, Jack isn't a politician," Ned Brown, his press adviser put in. "Here's a fellow coming along practically as a layman telling why the administration should be kept in power. From his own experience as a businessman."

"You hear a lot of inspired propaganda. From people feathering their own nests. But when Jack walks in to a room of 100 people, they all talk to him before the evening is over."

"That's how he knows what conditions are."

"The Republicans are putting the fear of God into the people that the country is going to ruin," Dempsey interposed. "It's as safe as the rock of Gibraltar. And Roosevelt's done a swell job saving it."

"If the common man has got any sense he's crazy if he doesn't vote for Roosevelt," Frederick Woltman in N. Y. World-Telegram.
