

GROWING INCOME INSURES BUDGET SAYS ROOSEVELT

to show" for the $3,000,000,000 by which he "increased" the same debt.

Cites Foreign Losses.

Carrying the contrast further he said the $3,000,000,000 "was little compared to the 'billions' that were sent abroad between 1920 and 1930 for armaments and 'foreign boondoggling,' which, he asserted, were 'gone for good,' and additional billions loaned to Europe during the war.

Declaring the national income had risen from $38,000,000,000 in 1922 to $52,000,000,000 last year and may go to $50,000,000,000 in 1936, he concluded:

"If it keeps on rising at the present rate, as I am confident that it will—the receipts of government, without imposing any additional taxes, will within a year or two, be sufficient to care for all ordinary and infrequent expenditures of the government—in other words, to balance the annual budget."

Trough Crisis

"The government of this great nation, solvent, credit in credit, is coming through a crisis as grave as war without having sacrificed American democracy or the ideals of American life."

Turning to "this foolish fear about the crushing load the debt will impose upon your children and mine," he started a loud demonstration by declaring:

"This debt is not going to be paid by oppressive taxation on future generations. It is not going to be paid by taking away the hard-won savings of the present generation.

"It is going to be paid out of an increased national income and increased individual income produced by increasing national prosperity."

Loud "boos" greeted the president's mention of "my predecessor" and "President Hoover's administration."

In what was interpreted as a reference to Col. Frank Knox, Republican vice-presidential nominee, Mr. Roosevelt said it was just as "technically and morally correct" to say the New Deal has increased the national debt by $13,000,000,000 as to tell the people of Pennsylvania that some of their bank deposits or insurance policies were sound.

Assets Cited

In an address at Allentown, Pa., September 5, Knox declared no insurance policy was secure nor bank deposit safe under the New Deal monetary policies.

The president emphasized the $8,000,000,000 increased national debt was a "net" increase.

"When you are told that the U. S. treasury has $13,000,000,000 more of liabilities than it had in 1933, you should also be told that it has $6,000,000,000 of increased assets to set off against their liabilities," he said.

This would make the "net" increase in debt $7,000,000,000, and there was no explanation in the speech for the other billion the president added on for his administration associates, said afterward he allowed for a billion in the increased assets as perhaps "non-recoverable."

Communications

Disagrees With Mrs. Hurd.

To the Editor:

Unlike Mrs. Hurd, I think your editorials about our president are just about right. You sure hit the nail on the head every stroke and unlike Knox and Coughlin and the great mining engineer, Hoover, you tell the truth and the truth is what hurts. People who are opposed to President Roosevelt and lies are what is hurting Landon, especially when they are told by such men as Hoover and Hearst and Coughlin. In my opinion Governor Landon has a big load to carry with Knox on one shoulder and Hearst on the other and Hoover between.

It looks to me as if that is an awful load for him to carry to the White House and if he can make the trip and land them there he will have a big job on his hands getting rid of them, because they will sure insist on running the government to suit themselves. When they find they can't do it, then they will turn their batteries, which, by the way, are rather weak, loose on him or else go off and hide their heads like Hoover did when he got snowed under.

However, I would like to say a few more words and then I will cut this communication out. It's just too bad that Mrs. Hurd was so disappointed in President Roosevelt's speech. Perhaps she has been listening to some of the "great engineer's" wise-cracks which made Mr. Roosevelt's talk seem so tame.

Roosevelt "Hates Too Well"

To the Editor:

The president's "red herring" speech was perhaps good politics, but does it fit the record?

No one disputes his sincerity in repudiating communism, nor can anyone dispute the fact he will get communist support in November as surely as Landon will receive reactionary support—and just as unwillingly. Both candidates are liberals who reject domination by a lunatic fringe whether of progress or reaction.

The record shows Landon consistently identified with the progressive element that dominated the Republican convention to the chagrin of the Old Guard. Knox is just as important as Garner and no more. As to the younger Republicans: they are led by such men as Charles Taft, with an unmatched record of civic reform. Is such a hanker more dangerous than the Hearst who nominated Roosevelt four years ago?

To state as F. D. R. did, that Landon and his key men are "not against the way of my reform, but against that reform itself, is a willful perversion of truth on a par with the Hearst attack that provoked it. Let Hearst and Farley play nuisance and while-wing alternately; the president belongs on the crown of the road.

You are aware I voted for F. D. R. in '32. If I now incline to Landon, Roosevelt's speech has much to do with it. His disavowal of communism was forthright and fine, but impugning his adversaries' motives was an act of unsportsmanlike intemperance neither Washington, Lincoln or Jefferson permitted themselves under greater provocation.

Roosevelt hates too well to be impressive in his role of sole savior of the liberal spirit. Herring of any color smelt as fishy on one man's hands as another. Even such haters of fascist reaction as Sinclair Lewis, Dorothy Thompson and Walter Lippman agree that the real issue is not progress versus reaction: it is the choice between a man demonstratively cautious in making fundamental changes who wishes to choose his footing carefully before leaping to the far bank of a stream over which there is no returning, a conciliatory listener, a cooperator, and a man whose brilliant achievements, equally desired by all liberals irrespective of party—are dimmed by equally dismal failures, and shadowed throughout by an impulsive haste and a high intolerance of opposition: sweet words for meek sheep, oblation for the rest. Warburg, Baruch, Johnson, Douglas, are a few of the casualties; Glass and Greenway, unbeatable in their states, escaped. Cooperation from expediency, and unenlightened leadership, and he maintains the REAL G.O.P. leadership is the same today. One may agree or disagree with this view but in the opinion of this paper, the RECORD, not only during those 12 years, but during the Republican campaign to date, ABSOLUTELY sustains it.

CHARLES VOORHIES.
Medford, Ore., Oct. 1.

Ed. note:—The above only demonstrates, we think, how the same speech can impress listeners quite differently.

If President Roosevelt impugned the motives and sincerity of ALL his adversaries, in an intemperate and unsportsmanlike manner, and if he declared or intimated outstanding Republican progressives like Charles Taft are against any real reform then we missed it. As we heard the speech the president was very careful to differentiate between the "real, actual, undercover, Republican leadership" and the "nominal leadership." And he emphasized this by stressing the Republican leadership of four, eight and 12 years ago, in all that he said. This leadership the president declared in effect, was a reactionary
