Comedians in Shakespeare Film

Joe E. Brown and James Cagney become the screen's wisest and funniest pair of lovers when they portray a scene of "Intense emotion" in the screen production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," coming Sunday to the Craterian theatre for its popular price run. Bringing to motion pictures the famous playwright's most famous comedy, the "Dream" has an all star cast that includes Dick Powell, Jean Muir, Victor Jory, Verne Tassdale, Hugh Herbert, Anita Louise, Frank McHugh, Ross Alexander, Ian Hunter, Mickey Rooney, Olivia DeHavilland, Hobart Cavanaugh and Grant Mitchell among the thousands of players. Eponymous comedy is mixed with the thrill of drama and beauty of spectacle, in which the wide scope of the screen is able to fully express all the dreams of Shakespeare as he wrote the play.

Comedy Team in Rialto Sunday Hit

Admittedly the funniest husband and wife team in pictures, Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland are again cast together—for the eleventh time—in "Wives Never Know," opening Sunday at the Rialto theater on the double feature program that will also have Phillips Holmes and Mae Clark in "The House of 1,000 Candles" on the same bill. Aiding and abetting in the general merriment of "Wives Never Know" is Adolphe Menjou, cast as the ser-longer and brought in two four-pointers and a three-point. Art Must and Gerald Krutzler from Toio and Ralph Rawson of Ashland joined the T. A. Muse party over the week-end, bagging three bucks. All the game was killed in the Greensprings mountain area. Don Applegate and Henry Knowles of Medford with Edward Immann returned Sunday, half-starved, from hunting in the Siskiyou mountains. They said everything was so dry they were afraid to make any sort of a campfire and had to forego their morning coffee. They jumped plenty of deer but could not get near them. They bagged one two-point. They were supper guests at the Tracy home Sunday.
