New Styles Expose Ears As Curls Replace Waves

By Mary Elizabeth Plummer.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—(AP)—Show your ears this fall—unless they are inordinately homely. "The ears give a youthful appearance," coiffure experts explained today at the "official hairdressers' show and convention."

Coiffures with the hair brushed off the ears and into open curls like those Empress Josephine wore were displayed as examples of how women's hair will look this fall and winter.

Simplified versions of elaborate regal styles were stressed as the coming vogue for American women, with brushed-up curls sometimes circling the entire head, like a crown, to form the new "coronation" hairdress.

The current revival of empire fashions and the coming coronation of King Edward VIII inspired the new coiffures, but some of the hair ornaments borrowed ideas from "swing" music. They were shaped with an upward swirl and one sparkling gadget was captioned, "Bird in Flight."

Ten thousand hairdressers from states east of the Mississippi took notes at the demonstrations and heard that "all hair is up from the face, smoothly groomed, never flying, never hanging down."

Curls—combed into a soft roll for day time and worn "high and tight" for evening—are far better than waves, the preferred hair tint is brownette, the redish-gold shade of Jean Harlow's hair at present, and there is no trend toward long hair.

Where the hair is long, it is dressed to look as if it's short-waved up from the neck, with no knot. With off-the-face hats, the curls at the top of the forehead may be worn out, to look like hat trimming, the stylized added.
