TEN-TON STONE USED AS MONEY
 HONOLULU (UP)—Two "coins" weighing several hundred pounds each have become the property of the Bishop museum.

 Kondo found one circular "coin" made from stone and commonly used by natives of the island, about 9 feet high and weighing almost 10 tons. This coin could purchase almost a complete village, he said. The smaller coins were said to be worth about one Japanese yen each, and at present rates of exchange would purchase a half dozen chickens.

YOUTHFUL PIANO ARTIST INSPIRES YOUNG MUSICIANS
 Medford people will remember little Ruth Slenczynski as the charming little piano prodigy who stopped at the Medford airport last year on a trip to San Francisco and who was the recipient of a beautiful bouquet of flowers from the Jackson county chamber of commerce and the Baldwin Piano Shoppe of this city. The little girl's brief life has been an interesting one.
 Many little girls play the piano, it is true, but very few of them as Ruth Slenczynski does. She is only eight years old. When she was but two and a half and was out walking with her father in Berkeley, she heard a piano being played and demanded one.
 Father had no money to buy the infant a piano; so he took her, instead to a piano shop and boosted her onto a stool before an instrument. In a few moments she located various chords and intervals and practiced them vigorously until her father dragged her away. After that there was no rest until Ruth had a piano—and in seven weeks she was playing Bach.
 Now she gives public concerts to the astonishment of learned critics and you will hear much more about her eventually. She reads a piano piece, first, as if it were the story piece, Jack and Jill and when it is finished she knows it. Then she plays it through on the piano and a week later plays it once more. From then on, it is fixed in her memory without further practice. . . . That, at any rate, is what her father would say. The genius, Paderewski, unfortunately crippled by arthritis at present, would say, "little girl, you must practice and practice. Without practice there is no conquering the piano, which is a stern master." Josef Hoffmann, who gave his first concert in this country at the age of ten, would tell her, "my dear, you need not practice always at the piano, but you must practice constantly in your mind."
 Little Ruth, however, may be a genius and beyond all rules and ad-

YOUTHFUL PIANO ARTIST INSPIRES YOUNG MUSICIANS
 Medford people will remember little Ruth Slenczynski as the charming little piano prodigy who stopped at the Medford airport last year on a trip to San Francisco and who was the recipient of a beautiful bouquet of flowers from the Jackson county chamber of commerce and the Baldwin Piano Shoppe of this city. The little girl's brief life has been an interesting one.
 Many little girls play the piano, it is true, but very few of them as Ruth Slenczynski does. She is only eight years old. When she was but two and a half and was out walking with her father in Berkeley, she heard a piano being played and demanded one.
 Father had no money to buy the infant a piano; so he took her, instead to a piano shop and boosted her onto a stool before an instrument. In a few moments she located various chords and intervals and practiced them vigorously until her father dragged her away. After that there was no rest until Ruth had a piano—and in seven weeks she was playing Bach.
 Now she gives public concerts to the astonishment of learned critics and you will hear much more about her eventually. She reads a piano piece, first, as if it were the story piece, Jack and Jill and when it is finished she knows it. Then she plays it through on the piano and a week later plays it once more. From then on, it is fixed in her memory without further practice. . . . That, at any rate, is what her father would say. The genius, Paderewski, unfortunately crippled by arthritis at present, would say, "little girl, you must practice and practice. Without practice there is no conquering the piano, which is a stern master." Josef Hoffmann, who gave his first concert in this country at the age of ten, would tell her, "my dear, you need not practice always at the piano, but you must practice constantly in your mind."
 Little Ruth, however, may be a genius and beyond all rules and ad-

TEN-TON STONE USED AS MONEY
 HONOLULU (UP)—Two "coins" weighing several hundred pounds each have become the property of the Bishop museum.
 About two feet high, with a hole through the middle, the coins came from the island of Yap, where they were obtained by Yoshio Kondo, young collector of the museum.
 Kondo found one circular "coin" made from stone and commonly used by natives of the island, about 9 feet high and weighing almost 10 tons. This coin could purchase almost a complete village, he said. The smaller coins were said to be worth about one Japanese yen each, and at present rates of exchange would purchase a half dozen
