OHIO COAL MINE FIRE, BURNING FOR 52 YEARS, MAY BE BRIDLED SOON

NEW STRAITSVILLE, O. (UP)—A smoldering coal mine fire that has burned for 52 years and destroyed millions of tons of "black gold" in this southeastern Ohio community soon may be extinguished.

For the first time since 1884 there is promise that the malignant blaze will be blotted out by fire-fighters enlisted by the government WPA engineers have surveyed the area and found the fire-fighting project to be feasible from the standpoint of cost and available labor supply.

Action on the undertaking depends on the response of the U. S. bureau of mines to a request for co-operation in supervision of the work by experienced mine engineers, according to Dr. Carl Watson, Ohio WPA administrator.

The fire started during a mine strike in the Hocking valley coal fields in 1884. Legend has it, infuriated miners loaded a barge with coal, poured kerosene over it, and sent the blazing mass hurtling into a mine shaft. The fire has burned over an area of six square miles and destroyed coal estimated at $40,000,000. For long periods it is dormant and then suddenly bursts into a conflagration that threatens lives and homes.

SECOND QUAD SET CAUSE OF DIVORCE

FUKUOKA, Japan (UP)—Women in other lands have won fame and fortune as the result of multiple births, but Mrs. Zenichi Sakata became the mother of two sets of quadruplets and was divorced.

The Dionne quintuplet precedent and that of mothers who have borne four children at the same time did not hold true in the case of Mrs. Sakata.

In 1932 she gave birth to four children, but they died. This summer two boys and two girls were born at the same time. All survived.

Persons in the neighborhood greeted the event with gossip to the effect that an evil spirit had centered upon the Sakata household. The superstitious talk reached the husband who, persuaded of its truth, divorced his wife.
