

ALIENS IN JAPAN NOW LIVE UNDER CODE OF MORALS

Warning, Then Deportation, Face Foreigners Transgressing Police Edicts—Olympics Behind Plan

TOKYO—(UP)—Police of Tokyo have set out to control morals as well as to curb dangerous thoughts. Deportation may be the fate of foreigners who transgress the new edicts.

As the first move in the campaign the metropolitan police board has worked out a definition of an "immoral foreigner."

An "immoral foreigner," the board ruled, is "one who at any one time has marital relations with more than one woman."

When such a person is found his employer will be notified and warned. If the warning is not heeded and the foreigner does not reform, he will be deported.

Special Police Picked—Six of the 12 detectives in the service of the foreign affairs section of the police department have been assigned to a control of morals.

The object of the special drive against immorality is that they have the city of Tokyo completely reformed by the time the Olympic games are held in 1940.

Several recent incidents have resulted in the detention and questioning of Japanese girls who have been consorting with foreigners.

Police are casting stern, disapproving eyes upon Tokyo's dance-halls and cafes.

Dance-halls were watched closely after police discovered that they were being used as headquarters for men engaged in milking wealthy widows and that some of the "20-sen-a-dance" girls were going out with patrons, including foreigners.

The proprietors promised to discontinue with men dancing instructors and to put their dancing girls in dormitories, with roll calls at night and in the morning. Police are encouraging this attitude of co-operation.

Scandals Develop—The situation came to a climax with arrest of a cafe waitress on suspicion that she gave information to the trade representative of what the vernacular newspapers mysteriously called "a certain foreign power."

Also, a dance-hall scandal at about the same time led to discussion of more stringent police regulations.

Proprietors of the halls, seeking to head off undesirable police supervision, hurried to the police with offers of voluntary reforms.

It has been suggested even that requests for autographs be prohibited, that dance-halls and even some cafes be closed temporarily.

PEAK YULE TRADE FORECAST; EARLY MAILING IS URGED

Predicting a billion dollar retail Christmas business this year, the postoffice department at Washington has issued a bulletin requesting all postoffices to organize immediately for the handling of the Yule mail.

The instructions were received here by Postmaster Frank DeSouza today. The postoffice department anticipates a Christmas business which will equal if not exceed the all-time peak volume of 1929 and requests postoffices throughout the country to prepare for the handling of the trade part of the business that will pass through the mails.

Mr. DeSouza said he is confident the postoffice Christmas business here this year will establish a new record.

As is customary extra help and facilities will be employed to handle the Yule business, Mr. DeSouza said, emphasizing that the additional personnel will be chosen from civil service lists. Additional help will also be employed at station 1, 34 North Central avenue, he stated. Extra trucks will be procured from the Rogue River national forest service.

Because of the exceptionally heavy burden to be placed upon the postal service, the postoffice department exhorts the public to buy early and mail early. Gift packages mailed in advance may be marked "Do not open until Christmas," the department points out.

Taking unusual steps to keep postal channels open fully for peacetime Christmas mail, the department entertains commercial interests to withhold heavy mailing of catalogs, calendars, etc., from December 10 to January 1.

"We're going to have a tremendous job on our hands this year and how well and efficiently we do it will depend in large measure upon the cooperation of the public," Mr. DeSouza said. "We'll do all that it is humanly possible to do in order to give good service, but if we are swamped at the last minute some one is bound to be disappointed."

"It cannot be emphasized too strongly or too frequently, therefore, that Christmas shopping and mailing should be done early. It is not too early to start Christmas shopping and mailing now. It can be done leisurely and pleasantly now and choice can be made from a wide variety of products. Those who delay too long will suffer the inconvenience of shopping among crowds, of having less to choose from and of meeting with the disappointment of having their mailed gifts delivered after the holiday."

"So let us all work together this year. Shop early and mail early!"

WEBFOOTS PUT ONE OVER ON CORVALLIS STUDENTS

CORVALLIS, Nov. 20.—(UP)—"U. of O." Big and black letters spelled that out in more than a dozen places on the campus of Oregon State college today and the Beaver had to admit that the Webfoots put one over on them.

Thus the University of Oregon drew first blood in its annual battle tomorrow with the college for interschool gridiron honors.

PERFECT WEATHER FOR FOOTBALL PROMISED

PORTLAND, Nov. 20.—(UP)—"Perfect" was the football weather forecast handed out today by the weather bureau for the week-end. There was a possibility of light rains tonight, but fair weather was in prospect tomorrow at Corvallis, where Oregon's annual state bridle battle will be waged between the state university and college.
