American Legion Auxiliary

By Grace Holmes
At the meeting of the auxiliary and American Legion last Tuesday evening Commander Fuegel, was presented with a birchwood plaque the history of which is herewith explained. Each auxiliary unit throughout the country has presented such a plaque to its American Legion post this past month.

The plaques are made of yellow birch, which is typical of the wood in the Argonne memorial forest in Wisconsin, the first memorial forest sponsored by the auxiliary. They were constructed at the Mountain Craft camp in the forest area by a specially selected group of civilian conservation corps boys and made available to the auxiliary by the United States forest service.

The plaques bear the words: "Conservation of Natural Resources is National Defense." and the conservation resolution passed at the national convention of the auxiliary in Cleveland last September, which reads: "Always pledged to maintain the strength and promote the general welfare of our republic and recognizing that the material power and social well-being of the American people were from the beginning based on unsurpassed natural resources, the depletion of which has confronted our country with a condition demanding national-wide governmental action to restore and preserve these shaken foundations of our original greatness; and further recognizing that the processes necessary to the restoration of these natural resources, and their perpetuation by wise use in the future, will not only strengthen the nation but also create a vast and ever available reservoir of useful employment, which will contribute permanently to the social security and economic independence of the American people, the American Legion auxiliary in convention assembled pledges its active support to the federal and state governments in their constructive efforts to restore and protect forests with all their multitude of attendant benefits on such lands as are primarily suited therefor, to reduce our loss of agricultural soil caused by erosion, to control destructive floods, and to conserve our resources of water in accordance with their most beneficial uses."
