WASHINGTON, May 19.—(AP)—Low prices on butterfats in relation to feeds probably will continue until new crops are available, the agriculture department predicted. The department said a more than usual price decline from March to April left quotations considerably higher than a year ago, and noted a "relatively low" butter production.

A decline in the market price of eggs from March 15 to April 15 brought little change in the price to farmers. A less than average increase in the farm price for eggs was predicted, with better prices in early 1938 to result from a reduced 1937 pullet crop. The department attributed a greater than average rise in the farm price of chickens this spring to a strong consumer demand.

Wall St. Report

NEW YORK, May 19.—(P)—A mild dribble of liquidation washed stock market leaders down fractions to a point or so today.

Despite these declines, coppers, farm implements, oils and some rails turned ahead for modest gains. Wall street men said market sentiment was muddled and buying impetus had been momentarily dulled by strikes, controversy over the administration's supreme court plan and indications the current session of congress would be protracted.

A gradual hardening of prices up to around mid-day was followed by quiet back-sliding. Toward the close, however, numerous issues in the loss column were up from earlier lows.

Transactions totaled about 750,000 shares. Today's closing prices for 22 selected stocks follow:
