paid if the plaintiff loses the suit.

From a practical standpoint, this means no one can even start a suit without furnishing bond for several million dollars, and no bonding company will ever back a plaintiff whom the law says the plaintiff must pay all damages unless he wins the suit.

In short, it means: No suits.

By legislative fiat, it is proposed to command allegiance to the law and to prevent suits against the law. This may have been proposed in connection with some other law in history, but the oldest legislative clerk cannot remember it.

Note: The bill is supposed to have been written by the unofficial Attorney-General Cohen with the help of TVA attorneys, but this supposition is being denied in congress. There the word is being passed around that nobody knows who wrote the bill.

Cool.

Mr. R. is standing the weather much better than the legislatirs.

Callers from congress found him last week wearing apparently old trousers and no coat. His shirt was tieless and open at the neck. He was dressed about the same as for a yachting trip.

The White House cooling system was working at about 70 degrees, and so was he.

Visitors.

Four well-dressed persons using a broad "a" and identifying themselves as British bankers, have been seen around Washington within a week. They were not together and apparently were not officially calling upon government authorities. Outwardly they seemed to be merely vacationing in Washintgon at the particular moment of the latest gold scare in London.

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau has been insisting daily that no coronation services for gold are contemplated by him, and most observers believe him.

The general presumption is that the visitors are working unofficially on gold cooperation methods between Washington and London.

Legislative Excursion.

The following disclosure of how lobbies win friends and influence people was posted on the bulletin board in the house as an official announcement:

"The group sponsoring government ownership of federal reserve banks are making the boat trip June 9. Among the distinguished guests present will be Mr. Dale Carnegie, author of the best book seller, How to Win Friends and Influence People; several United States senators, Col. Lawrence Westbrook of Texas and Washington; Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale university, 25 commissioners of agriculture from 25 different states, and many others. More than 100 members of congress have arranged to make the trip. The boat will leave at 10:30 a. m. and return at 3:30 p. m. A few talks will be made."

The announcement did not say who paid for the boat.
