STOCKING THE CAMP OR SUMMER CABIN

HAVING the kind of food you like on the long summer outing always has been a hard problem. To buy some of the things we like most, yet avoid spoilage, has been almost impossible because of lack of refrigeration. Especially is this true of meats. This was brought home to us last summer when we visited an isolated camp where friends had been for more than three weeks. For breakfast we were served with hotcakes with lots of fresh sweet butter and best of all excellent link pork sausage was on the table.

That seemed too good to be true so we asked about it. They showed us their food stores and most anything one could ask for was there in abundance. We made note of everything we saw, and now have a generous supply of everything our friends had. Whether for a long or short outing or for stocking up the summer cabin—look over the list elsewhere in this ad. Packed in sanitary tins—most anything you might want in a size to suit your needs—and you don't have to worry about spoilage.

History of Sausage

IT is common belief that Germany was the birthplace of sausage. From a careful study of history it is safe to assume sausage had its origin in Arabia many years before the birth of Christ. The Germans must, however, be given credit for the invention of more than seven hundred varieties. In medieval France, no feast was complete without an abundance of sausage. Another item of interest in the history of sausage is the birthplace of Bologna—Bologna originated in a province in Italy by that name. Now, we don't carry seventeen hundred varieties, but our assortment of lunch meats—bologna—sausage is most complete at all times.
