

The Weather
Forecast: Partly cloudy Sunday and Monday; cooler Monday.
Temperature
Highest yesterday 90
Lowest this morning 83

Best Go First
Are you looking for bargains? Then turn to the classified page and check the ads. It is important that this be done early as usually the best go first. Remember others are alert too.

Thirty-Second Year
STORM HINDERS SEARCH FOR AMELIA
MEDFORD, OREGON, SUNDAY, JULY 4, 1937

By H. R. Baukhage
Copyright, 1937, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.
WASHINGTON, July 4.—A Yankee from Montana is testing his saddle girth and oiling the old six-gun while you folks are preparing to foot off socks and pinholes.
He's Burton K. Wheeler, senator from the Bonanza state, and he's riding herd on the boys who are going to fight the administration court bill if it takes the last syllable in the unabridged dictionary.
"Not so long ago," this writer remarked to Senator Wheeler, on the eve of the battle, "you and the new deal were pretty well in step. How goes it now?"
A little breathlessly, for he had been riding pretty hard, politically speaking, for the past few hours, the senator responded in approximately these words:
"I have the same views on economic questions as I did. I am going along with the administration in that regard, just about as I did before. But there is nothing either liberal or progressive in the president's court proposal."
"I feel that the constitution belongs to the people. If they want to change it they should do it by constitutional amendment."

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

Danger Foreseen
OAKLAND, Calif., July 3.—(AP)—Amelia Earhart accepted full responsibility for her latest flight, George Palmer Putnam, her husband, said today.
Possibly foreseeing a forced landing in such an isolated spot as the Pacific ocean around Howland island, Putnam quoted Miss Earhart as telling him before she took off from Miami, Fla., last June 1 on her around-the-world attempt.
"I know that if I fail or that if I am lost, you will be blamed for allowing me to leave on this trip; the backers of the flight will be blamed, and everyone connected with it."
"But it's my responsibility and mine alone,"

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

County Coroner Frank Perl said last night there would be no inquest into the deaths of Sylvester W. True, financial executive of the Northwest Nazarene college at Nampa, Idaho, and Bernette Roy Zacharias, CCC boy, who were killed in auto accidents on the Grater Lake highway late Friday afternoon.
The condition of Janice Grigsby, 6, who is confined in Community hospital with a fractured skull and severe body bruises after being struck by an automobile on South Central avenue Friday afternoon, remained critical, the attending physician reported. However, her condition was satisfactory in view of the seriousness of her injury, he stated.
The body of Mr. True was sent to his home in Nampa last night from the Stock and Livestock funeral home in Ashland, where it had been taken following the accident. Funeral services will be held there.
The Messenger quartet from the Nazarene school, which accompanied Mr. True into southern Oregon, left yesterday for Nampa after cancelling all engagements, including appearance there tonight. The Rev. Fred M. Weatherford of the Nazarene church here stated that Mrs. U. E. Harding, soloist from Portland, would substitute for the singers.
The body of Bernette Roy Zacharias was to be sent to his home

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

PORTLAND, July 3.—(AP)—Judge Jacob Kanzler, presiding in the Multnomah circuit court, decreed unconstitutional today Oregon's agricultural marketing act, passed at a special session of the 1935 legislature.
The decision was rendered in a test case brought by the Oregon Creamery Manufacturers association and a group of creameries.
Judge Kanzler said the act was void because it delegated legislative powers to administrative officers. He also held that its effectiveness depends upon the assignment of authority to those other than provided in the state constitution.
The decision ordered Solon T. White, state director of agriculture, to desist from using any of the powers granted him by the act.

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

Plans for rebuilding and restoration were made yesterday afternoon a few hours after the city's worst fire in five years wiped out the Medford Domestic Laundry at 30 North Riverside avenue and Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty parlor and the Tri-State Neon sign shop around the corner on East Main street.
Miss Jeanne Fabrick, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Fabrick, president of the laundry company who is expected home today from a tour to the east, said a new building would be erected as soon as possible. She stated that it had not yet been decided whether the new structure would be erected on the present site or elsewhere.
Meantime arrangements were completed for continuing the business without interruption, and a temporary office was established in the Chevrolet show rooms at North Riverside avenue and East Main street, Miss Fabrick related.
Claims for the loss of garments are being received at the temporary office and will be paid promptly and in full, Miss Fabrick said.
Al Littell, officer of the Jackson County Investment company which owns the Sparta building and adjoining property on East Main street, stated that contractors had already

News Behind The News

He doesn't usually turn back. He did once, though, and if he hadn't, well, the story would have been quite different anyhow.
This is how it happened:
Some three decades ago, a solicitous, self-appointed reception committee looked over a lad in his early twenties waiting for a train out of Butte. They were moved to provide him some entertainment. They offered him a drink which he refused. Proffered a cigar which he accepted and then induced him to take his first lesson in poker. When they were through, there was no use trying to catch the train.
Burton Wendale Wheeler ought to be grateful to that little group in the back room of the saloon who took away his last nickel and forced him to go back, at 8 o'clock in the evening, and take the job he had passed up earlier in the day.
Because, from then on, Montana began to be good to him, although some of the early gifts were offered with the reverse English, or, perhaps at least, as blessings in heavy disguise.
When young Wheeler was graduated in 1900 from high school in Hudson, Mass., where there have been members of that family ever since the Pilgrims settled there, he probably could bound the state of Montana. But it isn't likely he ever imagined he'd inhabit it.
He went into business, but he dreamed of the law. A relative in Michigan suggested that he could work his way through the university there. So, after he had taken a meager harvest from the soil of business, he went to Ann Arbor.
There during vacations, he engaged in the traditional activities of the student of the day—selling books. Thus he finished his law course and set out toward the setting sun. He covered a good deal of territory, worked a few months in a law office in Colorado and then hit Butte, a foot-sore and foot-sore tenderfoot, and encountered the adventure aforementioned.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

(By the Associated Press)
HONOLULU, July 3.—The navy tonight moved to reinforce the faltering hunt for Amelia Earhart with the powerful aircraft carrier Lexington and 54 fighting planes in the face of discouraging prospects.
The Lexington was ordered to fuel to capacity and be ready to leave San Diego tomorrow for a 4,000-mile run to Howland island and take up the quest.
During a day of slowly ebbing hope, a long-range navy plane left Honolulu for a 1,500-mile dash to the scene but got caught in a snow, sleet and lightning storm high above the earth as it approached the quest.

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

(Continued on Page Two)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

(Continued on Page Ten)

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

(Continued on Page Ten)

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

(Continued on Page Ten)

News Behind The News

He doesn't usually turn back. He did once, though, and if he hadn't, well, the story would have been quite different anyhow.
This is how it happened:
Some three decades ago, a solicitous, self-appointed reception committee looked over a lad in his early twenties waiting for a train out of Butte. They were moved to provide him some entertainment. They offered him a drink which he refused. Proffered a cigar which he accepted and then induced him to take his first lesson in poker. When they were through, there was no use trying to catch the train.
Burton Wendale Wheeler ought to be grateful to that little group in the back room of the saloon who took away his last nickel and forced him to go back, at 8 o'clock in the evening, and take the job he had passed up earlier in the day.
Because, from then on, Montana began to be good to him, although some of the early gifts were offered with the reverse English, or, perhaps at least, as blessings in heavy disguise.
When young Wheeler was graduated in 1900 from high school in Hudson, Mass., where there have been members of that family ever since the Pilgrims settled there, he probably could bound the state of Montana. But it isn't likely he ever imagined he'd inhabit it.
He went into business, but he dreamed of the law. A relative in Michigan suggested that he could work his way through the university there. So, after he had taken a meager harvest from the soil of business, he went to Ann Arbor.
There during vacations, he engaged in the traditional activities of the student of the day—selling books. Thus he finished his law course and set out toward the setting sun. He covered a good deal of territory, worked a few months in a law office in Colorado and then hit Butte, a foot-sore and foot-sore tenderfoot, and encountered the adventure aforementioned.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

(By the Associated Press)
HONOLULU, July 3.—The navy tonight moved to reinforce the faltering hunt for Amelia Earhart with the powerful aircraft carrier Lexington and 54 fighting planes in the face of discouraging prospects.
The Lexington was ordered to fuel to capacity and be ready to leave San Diego tomorrow for a 4,000-mile run to Howland island and take up the quest.
During a day of slowly ebbing hope, a long-range navy plane left Honolulu for a 1,500-mile dash to the scene but got caught in a snow, sleet and lightning storm high above the earth as it approached the quest.

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

(Continued on Page Three)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

(Continued on Page Ten)

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

(Continued on Page Ten)

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

(Continued on Page Ten)

News Behind The News

He doesn't usually turn back. He did once, though, and if he hadn't, well, the story would have been quite different anyhow.
This is how it happened:
Some three decades ago, a solicitous, self-appointed reception committee looked over a lad in his early twenties waiting for a train out of Butte. They were moved to provide him some entertainment. They offered him a drink which he refused. Proffered a cigar which he accepted and then induced him to take his first lesson in poker. When they were through, there was no use trying to catch the train.
Burton Wendale Wheeler ought to be grateful to that little group in the back room of the saloon who took away his last nickel and forced him to go back, at 8 o'clock in the evening, and take the job he had passed up earlier in the day.
Because, from then on, Montana began to be good to him, although some of the early gifts were offered with the reverse English, or, perhaps at least, as blessings in heavy disguise.
When young Wheeler was graduated in 1900 from high school in Hudson, Mass., where there have been members of that family ever since the Pilgrims settled there, he probably could bound the state of Montana. But it isn't likely he ever imagined he'd inhabit it.
He went into business, but he dreamed of the law. A relative in Michigan suggested that he could work his way through the university there. So, after he had taken a meager harvest from the soil of business, he went to Ann Arbor.
There during vacations, he engaged in the traditional activities of the student of the day—selling books. Thus he finished his law course and set out toward the setting sun. He covered a good deal of territory, worked a few months in a law office in Colorado and then hit Butte, a foot-sore and foot-sore tenderfoot, and encountered the adventure aforementioned.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

(By the Associated Press)
HONOLULU, July 3.—The navy tonight moved to reinforce the faltering hunt for Amelia Earhart with the powerful aircraft carrier Lexington and 54 fighting planes in the face of discouraging prospects.
The Lexington was ordered to fuel to capacity and be ready to leave San Diego tomorrow for a 4,000-mile run to Howland island and take up the quest.
During a day of slowly ebbing hope, a long-range navy plane left Honolulu for a 1,500-mile dash to the scene but got caught in a snow, sleet and lightning storm high above the earth as it approached the quest.

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

(Continued on Page Three)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

(Continued on Page Ten)

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

(Continued on Page Ten)

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

(Continued on Page Ten)

News Behind The News

He doesn't usually turn back. He did once, though, and if he hadn't, well, the story would have been quite different anyhow.
This is how it happened:
Some three decades ago, a solicitous, self-appointed reception committee looked over a lad in his early twenties waiting for a train out of Butte. They were moved to provide him some entertainment. They offered him a drink which he refused. Proffered a cigar which he accepted and then induced him to take his first lesson in poker. When they were through, there was no use trying to catch the train.
Burton Wendale Wheeler ought to be grateful to that little group in the back room of the saloon who took away his last nickel and forced him to go back, at 8 o'clock in the evening, and take the job he had passed up earlier in the day.
Because, from then on, Montana began to be good to him, although some of the early gifts were offered with the reverse English, or, perhaps at least, as blessings in heavy disguise.
When young Wheeler was graduated in 1900 from high school in Hudson, Mass., where there have been members of that family ever since the Pilgrims settled there, he probably could bound the state of Montana. But it isn't likely he ever imagined he'd inhabit it.
He went into business, but he dreamed of the law. A relative in Michigan suggested that he could work his way through the university there. So, after he had taken a meager harvest from the soil of business, he went to Ann Arbor.
There during vacations, he engaged in the traditional activities of the student of the day—selling books. Thus he finished his law course and set out toward the setting sun. He covered a good deal of territory, worked a few months in a law office in Colorado and then hit Butte, a foot-sore and foot-sore tenderfoot, and encountered the adventure aforementioned.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

(By the Associated Press)
HONOLULU, July 3.—The navy tonight moved to reinforce the faltering hunt for Amelia Earhart with the powerful aircraft carrier Lexington and 54 fighting planes in the face of discouraging prospects.
The Lexington was ordered to fuel to capacity and be ready to leave San Diego tomorrow for a 4,000-mile run to Howland island and take up the quest.
During a day of slowly ebbing hope, a long-range navy plane left Honolulu for a 1,500-mile dash to the scene but got caught in a snow, sleet and lightning storm high above the earth as it approached the quest.

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

(Continued on Page Three)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

(Continued on Page Ten)

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

(Continued on Page Ten)

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

(Continued on Page Ten)

News Behind The News

He doesn't usually turn back. He did once, though, and if he hadn't, well, the story would have been quite different anyhow.
This is how it happened:
Some three decades ago, a solicitous, self-appointed reception committee looked over a lad in his early twenties waiting for a train out of Butte. They were moved to provide him some entertainment. They offered him a drink which he refused. Proffered a cigar which he accepted and then induced him to take his first lesson in poker. When they were through, there was no use trying to catch the train.
Burton Wendale Wheeler ought to be grateful to that little group in the back room of the saloon who took away his last nickel and forced him to go back, at 8 o'clock in the evening, and take the job he had passed up earlier in the day.
Because, from then on, Montana began to be good to him, although some of the early gifts were offered with the reverse English, or, perhaps at least, as blessings in heavy disguise.
When young Wheeler was graduated in 1900 from high school in Hudson, Mass., where there have been members of that family ever since the Pilgrims settled there, he probably could bound the state of Montana. But it isn't likely he ever imagined he'd inhabit it.
He went into business, but he dreamed of the law. A relative in Michigan suggested that he could work his way through the university there. So, after he had taken a meager harvest from the soil of business, he went to Ann Arbor.
There during vacations, he engaged in the traditional activities of the student of the day—selling books. Thus he finished his law course and set out toward the setting sun. He covered a good deal of territory, worked a few months in a law office in Colorado and then hit Butte, a foot-sore and foot-sore tenderfoot, and encountered the adventure aforementioned.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

(By the Associated Press)
HONOLULU, July 3.—The navy tonight moved to reinforce the faltering hunt for Amelia Earhart with the powerful aircraft carrier Lexington and 54 fighting planes in the face of discouraging prospects.
The Lexington was ordered to fuel to capacity and be ready to leave San Diego tomorrow for a 4,000-mile run to Howland island and take up the quest.
During a day of slowly ebbing hope, a long-range navy plane left Honolulu for a 1,500-mile dash to the scene but got caught in a snow, sleet and lightning storm high above the earth as it approached the quest.

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

(Continued on Page Three)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

(Continued on Page Ten)

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

(Continued on Page Ten)

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

(Continued on Page Ten)

News Behind The News

He doesn't usually turn back. He did once, though, and if he hadn't, well, the story would have been quite different anyhow.
This is how it happened:
Some three decades ago, a solicitous, self-appointed reception committee looked over a lad in his early twenties waiting for a train out of Butte. They were moved to provide him some entertainment. They offered him a drink which he refused. Proffered a cigar which he accepted and then induced him to take his first lesson in poker. When they were through, there was no use trying to catch the train.
Burton Wendale Wheeler ought to be grateful to that little group in the back room of the saloon who took away his last nickel and forced him to go back, at 8 o'clock in the evening, and take the job he had passed up earlier in the day.
Because, from then on, Montana began to be good to him, although some of the early gifts were offered with the reverse English, or, perhaps at least, as blessings in heavy disguise.
When young Wheeler was graduated in 1900 from high school in Hudson, Mass., where there have been members of that family ever since the Pilgrims settled there, he probably could bound the state of Montana. But it isn't likely he ever imagined he'd inhabit it.
He went into business, but he dreamed of the law. A relative in Michigan suggested that he could work his way through the university there. So, after he had taken a meager harvest from the soil of business, he went to Ann Arbor.
There during vacations, he engaged in the traditional activities of the student of the day—selling books. Thus he finished his law course and set out toward the setting sun. He covered a good deal of territory, worked a few months in a law office in Colorado and then hit Butte, a foot-sore and foot-sore tenderfoot, and encountered the adventure aforementioned.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER ORDERED TO SEEK MISSING AVIATORS

Navy Plane From Honolulu Forced Back By Snow, Sleet Storm—Radio Calls Doubled By Searchers.

(By the Associated Press)
HONOLULU, July 3.—The navy tonight moved to reinforce the faltering hunt for Amelia Earhart with the powerful aircraft carrier Lexington and 54 fighting planes in the face of discouraging prospects.
The Lexington was ordered to fuel to capacity and be ready to leave San Diego tomorrow for a 4,000-mile run to Howland island and take up the quest.
During a day of slowly ebbing hope, a long-range navy plane left Honolulu for a 1,500-mile dash to the scene but got caught in a snow, sleet and lightning storm high above the earth as it approached the quest.

Hope Wanes

Fears for the safety of Amelia Earhart (above), world's best known woman aviator, and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, increased as no word came from the trackless Pacific northwest of Howland island where they were forced down on an attempted round-the-world flight. (A. P. Photo.)

(Continued on Page Three)

PLAN NO INQUEST IN DEATH OF TWO IN AUTO CRASHES

Body Of Church Leader Sent To Nampa, Idaho, For Burial—Grigsby Girl Remains In Critical Stage

(Continued on Page Ten)

AGRICULTURAL ACT DECLARED INVALID IN TEST HEARING

Multnomah Judge Says Law Unconstitutional Because Of Delegation Of Power—Effect Is Minimized.

(Continued on Page Ten)

Laundry Guttled by Blaze

Photographs above show the fire which early Saturday morning caused a loss of $50,000 to $75,000. Top view shows the blaze raging in the Medford Domestic Laundry, in the rear of which the fire started. Center photo gives an idea of the destruction wrought in the laundry building. At the bottom spectators are shown watching the fire from East Main street, to which the flames leaped their way to wipe out Cupp's new and used furniture store, Murray's beauty shop and the Tri-State Neon sign company. (Shangle Photos.)

BURNED LAUNDRY PLANS REBUILDING IN NEAR FUTURE

Repairs To Sparta Building Also To Go Ahead Following Early Saturday Morning Conflagration.

(Continued on Page Ten)