HAWAII PLANNING FOR FOOD RESERVE IN CASE OF SIEGE

HONOLULU (UP)—Food is so important as an armament to make this part of America self-sufficient in event of a siege by an enemy fleet, is the opinion of Major-Gen. Hugh A. Drum, U. S. army, organizer of a new branch of the army known as the service command.

Officers assigned to this command are detailed to each of the eight islands of the Hawaiian group to study food production and consumption. At the completion of these preliminary studies concrete plans for emergency farming will be formed.

Aiding the army in this branch of the service is the federal department of agriculture's experiment station. These tests are carried on in developing crops that can be planted without delay to provide an emergency supply of staple vegetables and fruits if the chief source of foodstuffs—the United States—is cut off by an enemy blockade.

Under normal conditions Hawaii has less than two months supply of foodstuffs on hand. Under the planned system of emergency farming specially-produced crops would augment this reserve within a few months of the time they were planted.

Proof of the islands' dependence on other parts of the United States for the greater portion of its food is evidenced by the department of commerce reports showing that during the past fiscal year of 1936 the territory found it necessary to purchase for its civilian population alone, which numbers nearly 369,000 persons, 1,943,219 pounds of dried beans; 5,532,400 pounds of onions; 1,232,775 pounds of baked beans; $2,000,000 worth of fresh fruits; $9,000,000 worth of fresh and prepared meats; $74,207 worth of fish, and $1,623,000 worth of eggs.

In addition to the civilian population, army and navy forces stationed on the islands number approximately 15,500.
