blazing with raging indignation, as the meaning of his peculiar actions flashed over her. Kay slipped off the rock, and back into the shadow of the pines. Pulling out her gun, she started a rapid and noiseless descent toward the spot that she had seen from above.

Her heart beat like a trip-hammer as she realized that the probably had spotted the firebug that the whole county had been looking for. During the last two months, a series of forest fires had broken out, and only the vigilance of the fire patrols had saved the region from disastrous losses. The conviction that the first wave of incendiary origin had gradually grown, although no one had been able to prove it.

Her indignation completely blotting out any thought of fear for herself, Kay slowed down and steadied her nerves with an iron grip as she noiselessly slipped from one tree trunk to another.

She could see the russet color of the dead pine now, and the outline of the pile of brush at its base. The crash of the dried branches as they were stacked up on the side of the pile away from her told her that she was in time. With her forward.

She rounded the pile and pointed her gun at the stooped figure of the man, who was bent over, propping a long branch against the others.

Her clear "Throw 'em up!" rang through the woods in no uncertain tones.

Whirling about, the man straightened and faced her, then slowly obeyed the command, his eyes fixed at first on the gleaming barrel of the gun that covered him, then lifting to meet Kay's stern gaze.

A strange feeling clutched Kay's heart at the man's expression. His face was gaunt and drawn, and there were great dark circles under the desperate eyes that met hers. She had never seen a look of such mingled misery and proud defiance. For the first time, a doubt as to whether her suspicion was right, all evidence to the contrary, flashed over her.

Kay's lifetime on the range had made her a keen judge of men, and something instinctively told her that this man wasn't bad. In spite of his desperate look, his eyes were honest, and his mouth was straight and decent, and yet—

She hardened herself against the unreasoning sympathy that stole over her, and steeled herself to play her part in bringing him to justice.

"You've Never Been Hungry" "THROW out your gun!" she commanded.

The man's shoulders twitched into a shrug. "I haven't any." His voice reflected the despair of his general attitude, and in spite of her suspicion, Kay felt the ring of truth in it.

"You were about to set a forest fire," she accused.

"The man made no attempt to deny it.

"What if I was?" he challenged harshly. "Why not?"

"Why not?" Kay echoed, her voice shrill with indignant surprise at such a question. The thought flashed over her that the man must be a lunatic, but she instantly dismissed it; there was nothing insane about the eyes that gazed at her with bitter intensity.

FLAME TRAIL

BY MARIE DE NERVAUD

Chapter One Face To Face With A Firebug

KAY CRANDON pulled her mount in for a breathing spell, as she topped the steep rise to the eastern ridge of the Bitter Root mountains. Below her, through the scant growth of pine and tamarack that timbered the ridge, she could see the glistening water of a lake, and beyond, the sharp, magnificent peaks of the Cabinet range, that rose precipitously from the valley floor.

The breathless stillness of the warm September afternoon was unbroken, save for the blowing of Kay's roan horse, and the creaking of saddle leather, as he shifted his weight and turned an inquiring head toward his mistress.

Kay laughed softly, as she slipped off her broad-brimmed hat and fanned herself with it.

"Don't worry, Flicker. I promise we'll get home in time for supper."

She leaned forward to pat his neck, and the sunlight slanting through the pine branches gleamed on a mass of Auburn curls that glinted back, as though celebrating their release from the rigid confinement of the unyielding hand. Microscopic beads of perspiration stood on Kay's forehead, and she dropped the reins over her nominal as she pulled out a handkerchief and wiped them off.

"No use hurrying, Flicks," she soothed, as her mount again stirred restively. "If it's hot as this up

"Throw out your gun!" Kay commanded. She steeled herself against sympathy for this man who looked honest and decent despite his action.

here, it will be even warmer in the valley."

Kay paused a moment, and then added half aloud and half to herself:

"Babs is having supper at the Flying Six, and with Aunt Kate away, there's no special reason to get back early. I may as well go out on my point, and give us both a bit of a rest."

Suited the action to the words, Kay dismounted, and flinging Flicker's reins over his head, left him on the trail, as she made her way along a rocky ledge that led to a standing pet at a Kewanee club pet and dog show. Second prize went to a goat.
