

SUBSTITUTE PLAN INSUFFICIENT IS ROOSEVELT VIEW

It was a friendly and very interesting conference," Burke added. The judiciary committee set about its work by forming an eight-man sub-committee to draft the new reform bill applying only to the lower courts. The committee unanimously agreed to expand the measure, if possible, to include regulation of bankruptcy and receivership fees.

Senator McCarran (D. Nev.) was named to head the subcommittee, which Chairman Ashurst (D. Ariz.) said he hoped would submit a preliminary report by next Thursday. Others named were: Dieterich (D. Ill.); McGill (D. Kans.); Connally (D. Tex.); Van Nuys (D. Ind.); O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.); Borah (R. Idaho); and Austin (R. Ver.).

Foes to Draft Bill
Opponents of the original Roosevelt court bill were given no room in drafting the new measure. Six of the eight sub-committee members were opposed to the president's plan. Senator Borah suggested expanding the bill, if possible, to cover receiverships.

McCarran called the sub-committee to begin work tomorrow. Ashurst said Attorney General Cummings would be asked to co-operate.

The administration spokesman who discussed the president's attitude toward the week's climactic developments in the court bill fight said that it was up to congress to decide whether reasonable general legislation was to be enacted. There was no indication whether the administration would make an effort to get additional legislation at this session.

Court Agitation Cited
The administration spokesman reviewed the problem of the federal judiciary since 1912 when, he said, the late Theodore Roosevelt campaigned on a court change program.

For 15 or 20 years thereafter, the spokesman continued, the Roosevelt demand for a court reorganization had an enormous effect on the court. During years when court agitation was prominent, he said, the courts listened and made their decisions more along judicial lines than legislative lines.

The situation prevailed, he said, until the administration of President Coolidge and Hoover, when the courts, he asserted, proceeded more along legislative lines.

This brought a realization generally, the spokesman continued, that agitation had to be renewed and this was begun with President Roosevelt's surprise message to congress on February 5 requesting a revision among the lower and highest courts.

Court "Listens"
The spokesman asserted that President Roosevelt believed an interesting parallel now exists as a result of the administration effort in this congress with the days when the "courts listened." Therefore, he believed that a large part of his court program has already been accomplished, temporarily at least.

The spokesman said that before February 5, the supreme court held the agricultural adjustment act unconstitutional, but that after the chief executive's court recommendations had gone to congress, the supreme court in effect overruled itself in the AAA decision by upholding the social security act.

The same thing was true in the case of the outlawing of the Guffey coal act before February 5 and the upholding of the Wagner labor relations act after that date. The spokesman said there was a similar parallel, also, in the New York minimum wage law case, which the court held unconstitutional, while afterward it upheld the Washington minimum wage law.

No Hard Feelings Between Rivals

No animosity was apparent when Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky (left) and Senator Pat Harrison (right) of Mississippi, discussed with Vice-President McNary the matter of a successor to the late Senator Joe Robinson as senate majority leader. The three men are shown on board the train which brought them back from Arkansas to Washington, D. C. after attending the funeral of Robinson. Barkley won the position Wednesday by a vote of 38 to 37.—(A. P. Photos.)

Part Success
The net result, the spokesman said, is that the president feels the administration has attained certain of its objectives.

One of the principal gains the president was represented as counting was that the country has been made court conscious and constitution minded. It has reached the conclusion as a result of the court dispute in congress, he added, that the constitution is not intended to block social and economic reforms if they are necessary to the general welfare.

The administration spokesman was asked if President Roosevelt was satisfied with this measure of progress and replied that he felt he was making progress but still had a long way to go.

Asked if the president considered further legislation on the subject desirable, the spokesman called attention to his recommendations on the subject and added that congress has three alternatives—not acting at all, rejecting recommendations and approving recommendations.

Adjournment Favored
The spokesman noted that there already was apparent among certain elements of congress a feeling that congress now should go home and leave the remainder of its work to a future session.

He asserted that an important publisher recently called on the president and inquired why he wanted anything else new, asserting that people were more prosperous now than they ever had been before.

The spokesman said President Roosevelt told the publisher that during the Coolidge administration the general attitude was "everything lovely—don't rock the boat—just let everything alone."

The president went on, the spokesman said, by citing as an example a prospective cotton crop of 14,500,000 bales this year. This, he said, was more than could be used or exported, and will mean that much of it will be added to a current surplus.

1929 Cited
Going on with his illustration, the president, according to the spokesman, asked his visitor to suppose nature is good again next year and the government does not move to stabilize conditions in the cotton industry. In such an event, he was represented as telling the publisher, it is possible that the country will see eight, seven or even six cent cotton again.

Whereupon the publisher was said to have advised the president "to let nature take its course." To which the president was said to have replied by recalling what happened in 1929.

The president was represented as believing the same philosophy applies to other crops, to wages and hours, housing, and government reorganization programs.

The whole situation, the spokesman added, is in the lap of the legislative branch of the government. It must decide what the future is going to be, he added, whether it is to be uncontrolled as he said it was in 1929 or whether reasonable legislation is to be enacted to prevent another crisis.

It is up to congress, the administration spokesman added, to say when it is going to quit.

FOREST SERVICE MAPS OUT TRIP FOR MOTORISTS

The following recreational bulletin was issued today by Rogue River National Forest headquarters:

"The Siskiyou summit drive is especially attractive at this time for its many wildflowers. It is suggested for a trip this week-end. It also offers a most enjoyable week-end trip with an overnight stop at Wrangle gap. The roads are in good repair.

"From Medford drive out West Main street to Jacksonville, then proceed through the town to Ruch. From there go straight ahead, parallel to the upper Big Applegate river toward the Star ranger station. Here, campfire permits are issue free of charge, and if desired a forest service representative will detail your trip from the station.

"Two miles above the station, past the McKee forest camp at the large covered McKee bridge and about a quarter of a mile farther on, the road forks and you drive up the Beaver creek road to the left. A three-mile drive brings you to the recently completed Beaver-Sulphur forest camp.

"Two miles beyond the camp a road to the left leads to Water gulch, Yale creek, and Little Applegate. Half a mile along this road, at the summit, a fork to the left leads about three miles to Cinnabar peak. Here you may see the tower-type fire lookout.

"About two miles beyond the Water Gulch turn-off is the Beaver ranch to your right. The road now climbs away from the stream and ascends the hill. The forest trees here are open Ponderosa pine.

"Three miles farther on is Deadman's Point, and a mile beyond that is Chappel springs. This cold spring is a good place to fill your canteen. One mile from the spring, keep to the left at the junction of the Perk's Pasture road. The next few miles to the Dutchman peak turnoff at Jackson's gap will afford an unparalleled view of mountain landscape, and the clear air at that altitude is cool and stimulating.

"A drive up Dutchman peak will repay you by the magnificence of a view which ranges from distant Preston peak in the coast range to the west, north down Yale creek, across the Rogue River valley to the mountains near Big Camas west of Diamond lake, and around in a spacious sweep, including snow-capped Mount McLaughlin (Pitt) to far-away Mount Shaasta in the southeast. Dutchman is one of the most popular lookouts in the forest because of its easy accessibility and magnificent view.

"Back again at Jackson's gap, you proceed two miles to the side road which leads down the hill to Wrangle gap. With the completion last summer of a community shelter with stoves, tables, fireplace and tap water, this popular forest camp has all necessary facilities. These are provided free by the forest service.

"Three miles beyond the Wrangle gap turnoff, a long, twisting road to the right takes you 34 miles to Hill, Cal., down the old railroad grade of the Farmer's and Fruitgrowers Supply company's logging operations. These you may see to the left.

"From this point, which is called Siskiyou gap, it is six miles to Mt. Ashland, which is the most popular forest service lookout.

"Thirteen miles beyond, along a sloping ridgetop past Bull Gap, is Ashland. The distance from Star ranger station over the Siskiyou drive to Ashland is 43 miles. The total round-trip is 76 miles."
