

U. S. INCREASES SAFETY AREAS FOR BIG GAME

Large Scale Work Carried Forward in All Sections to Preserve Animals Almost Entirely Wiped Out

WASHINGTON (UP)—The government is spending millions of dollars to protect and propagate big game which pioneers of the west almost wiped out in the last century.

Scores of big-game preserves have been established and many tons of feed are shipped to them each year. State and national laws have been passed for protection of the relatively small number of big game left.

This campaign to prevent the extinction of big game from the United States was begun on a large scale only a few years ago. Already it has more than doubled the number of many animals and birds.

Relief workers under the works progress administration are improving five federal big-game preserves in North Dakota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana and Oklahoma. The work is being supervised by the U. S. biological survey.

Eastern Waterfowl Protected
Hundreds of other projects for improving wildlife habitat already have been completed, are under construction or are planned. These include 17 waterfowl refuges along the Atlantic coast from Canada to the Gulf where ducks may stop on their southward and northward flight without fear of guns.

Virtually every state has from two to ten wildlife refuges which protect animals and birds native to that region. The total of these is in excess of 3,000,000 acres.

The new western preserves, however, are the most extensive projects for preserving big game which once roamed the great plains in large numbers. The five preserves comprise more than 120,000 acres.

The smallest is Sully's Hill game preserve, near Devil's lake, N.D., containing approximately 1000 acres where buffalo, elk, white-tailed deer, as well as ring-necked pheasants, wild geese and ducks and other species of birds, find sanctuary.

Elk Refuge in Wyoming
The federal elk refuge, at Jackson, Wyo., contains 15,737 acres originally established for winter feeding of elk. It also provides sanctuary for deer, as

As a result, regents found themselves with authority to offer a president $17,500 a year in addition to residence and utilities. He will be the highest paid state official. His pay will exceed the $15,000 a year the university's athletic association has promised Dana S. Bible as football coach and athletic director.

The new president will head an institution which already has exceeded by far anything dreamed by the Texas pioneers who listed as a cause for their declaration of independence Mexico's failure to provide public education.

Aid to the University of Texas rapid growth is oil. Its oil and gas properties are estimated conservatively to be worth $250,000,000. Oil men have estimated their potential value at double that.

The oil lies in a vast domain given the university in its earliest days as a state grant. First well on university-owned land produced oil in 1923. Now there are 600 producing oil and gas wells furnishing an income of $75,000 monthly. All this is not immediately usable by the university. It is deposited in a permanent fund and only the current interest from the $72,000,000 fund may be expended.

The fund had its inception in 1872 when the university sold surface rights on 42,400 acres. Mineral rights were retained.

TEXAS UNIVERSITY SPROUTS RAPIDLY ON OIL ROYALTIES

Enters 'Big Time' Class in Fall With $17,500 President And $15,000 Football Coach—Plant Big.

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—The University will open next fall as a "big time" school. The modern institution with a 27-story administration building, a $17,500-a-year president, a $15,000-a-year football coach and 7,500 students will be far removed from the small state college that, not many years ago, hired cowboys to herd cattle on its campus.

The $1,533,000 administration building was completed this year, marking the end of a $9,000,000 campus building program for which oil royalties were pledged.

The Texas legislature boosted the salary for the university president more than 100 per cent, indicative of a desire to attract a big name educator to fill the chair left vacant by death of Harry Yandell Benedict, alumnus president.

SUIT IS PENDING ON RESTORATION OF VATICAN ART

At Issue Is Authority Of Commission Of Arbiters To Fix Fee For Restoring Raphael And Giotto.

VATICAN CITY (UP)—Just how far the authority of a commission of arbiters extends will be threshed out before the Laical civil tribunal here soon in a suit involving Prof. Pietro de Pral, who retouched a Raphael and a Giotto for the Vatican museums, and Marquis Camillo Serafini, governor of the city.

The delicate points at issue are whether the commission appointed by the litigants to decide on the compensation to be paid Prof. Pral for his work had the legal authority to decide the amount to be paid and whether a majority or unanimous vote was required.

The case, which will be decided before the tribunal disbanded for the summer, had its origin several years ago. Pral, who long ago established an international reputation as a restorer and retoucher of paintings, was hired by the Vatican museums to restore the Transfiguration by Raphael and a polyptych by Giotto, formerly owned by Cardinal Stefanoschi, both in the basilica of St. Peter's.

No Price Fixed
The professor went to work and as is usually the case no price was fixed. He not only restored both paintings but reassembled the polyptych which was scattered all over the territory. His work was commended by experts and art critics all over Italy.

When the work was completed satisfactorily, Pral and Bartolomeo Nogara, director pro tem of the galleries, failed to agree on the compensation. After some discussion both agreed to appoint a committee of arbiters. Nogara named Achille Bertini-Calosci, professor at the University of Rome and inspector of medieval and modern art in the Umbrian museums, and Pral designated Dr. Remo Montrolli. The two members of the commission in turn appointed Prof. Romolo Artolli.

After several sittings and visits to the paintings, the tribunal decided that 20,000 lire ($1,050) fully represented the stipend to be paid the artist. Montrolli, however, thought that 2,000,000 lire ($105,000) came nearer representing his principal's skill and craftsmanship in restoring the paintings to the original, primitive state: 700,000 for the Transfiguration and 1,300,000 for the Giotto.

After long discussions, Montrolli and Artolli, the third member of the commission compromised on 900,000 lire.

One Commissioner Retires
At this point of the proceedings Bertini-Calosci decided that the going was rough and, pleading that he was a functionary in the Italian government and did not wish to be embroiled in such a ticklish affair, decided to retire from the commission. It may be said that he failed to agree with his two colleagues on the compensation to be paid Pral.

The commission had its first sitting in May, 1936, and the two remaining members of the body presented their report to Marquis Serafini the following month.

Serafini failed to reply and on July 4, 1936, Pral wrote to the Marquis submitting his bill, but again the letter remained unanswered.

Pral, through his lawyer, Agostino Mittiga, then sued the government. Serafini appointed Angelino Rota as his attorney. Both presented their briefs to the tribunal. The case was to have come up before the tribunal in May, but the court asked a postponement to enable it better to study the case.

Serafini's attorney argued that the results arrived at by the two members of the commission are not valid since the third member, the Vatican appointee, retired. Mittiga, Pral's lawyer, however, replied that all three members of the commission were in full accord on the holding of the vote and that a record of this decision is preserved in the minutes of the meeting.

Subject To Dispute
Pral further added that the commission was a friendly, informal one, while the defendant formally declared that it was a formal body, whose only task was to suggest a stipend for the artist. The Vatican pointed out that the question was not a litigious one and that all the commission was to do was to make a suggestion.

Furthermore, being a formal commission, added the Vatican lawyer, which is not in the same nature as a jury of referees, the commission was obliged to give its vote in unanimity according to the findings arrived at. The plaintiff disagreed with that thesis by stating that both litigants agreed to appoint three commissioners—deliberately an odd number in case of discord—and

DISABLED VETS TO INSTITUTE DRIVE; PICNIC IS SLATED

A drive for new members was authorized at a meeting of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War in the Medford armory last night.

It was stated there are 150 eligibles in Jackson county, the chapter now having a membership of 97. Frank Holbrook, state senior vice-commander, said he would give a ticket to Oriental garden dances to each comrade bringing in a new member. Eligible for membership is any American or allied veteran injured abroad in the World War.

The office of senior vice-commander was declared vacant because of the election of Frank Holbrook, incumbent, to the state department office at the recent Oregon convention. John Meals was advanced to the office from junior vice-commander and Luther Tingley was elected junior vice-commander.

The chapter and auxiliary voted to hold a joint picnic in Grants Pass municipal park Sunday. Members and friends are invited. Each attending is to bring his own lunch. The picnicers were asked to assemble in the park about 11 a. m.

The chapter and auxiliary also decided to meet with the Josephine county units in Grants Pass next Tuesday, August 3. Business meetings will be held in the courthouse and a social in the library.

Authority was voted by the chapter for a resolution commending the national guard, urging all employers to allow their employees to attend camp this summer and advising eligible young men to join the local national guard companies.

On behalf of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Ira D. Canfield presented silverware to the chapter and auxiliary for their help in selling poppies last spring.

DISMISS CHARGE AGAINST CLIFTON

A motion dismissing the charge against Claire Enos Clifton, whose wife and 10-year-old daughter accused him of a statutory offense against the daughter, was filed yesterday, by the district attorney.

The pair, after the father had been arrested and held in the county jail for a week, repudiated their first statements.

The mother blamed her first affidavits on "excessive jealousy," and the child was unable to state why she had made the damaging accusations. The case is now officially closed.

Clifton has returned to his employment as a bookkeeper for a local federal agency, and informed the authorities "I will provide for my family, but will stay away from them."
