

THOUSANDS SLAIN IN FURIOUS FIGHT TO OCCUPY LOTIEN

line. At any sign of retreat the machine gunners were told to fire at their own countrymen.

Today's battle carried destruction well away from the closer scenes of two weeks of Shanghai war.

Desolation

Hongkew and Yangtze districts of the city were burnt-out craters of desolation. New and apparently more terrific eruptions spouted on a north-west line through Kiating and Nansiang to Luho, on the mighty Yangtze.

Along this line, Japanese warplanes started a powerful bombardment of Chinese positions. Newly-arrived Japanese reinforcements drove forward against the weary Chinese armies, heartened late today by arrival of the first of the three new divisions and heavy artillery support.

Chinese said three thousand Japanese were killed or wounded at Lotien, but Japanese army spokesmen denied the claim. Chinese told of a retreat by Japanese from Lotien to Lion forest. Japanese said the only time their forces had retreated during the warfare thus far was when fires raged in the Yangtze sector.

300 Civilians Killed

Japanese also denied a Chinese charge that Japanese machine guns poured death into civilian crowds along the Wayside district of the river front. But today, the Shanghai municipal council had removed two hundred bodies of Chinese civilians in that area.

From a Japanese army spokesman came a warning that American flags would not protect the American-mortgaged Ting on company cotton mill in Woosung, where the Whangpoo joins the Yangtze. The Japanese army, he said, would be forced to "take action" there because of the "presence of Chinese firing trench mortars."

The Shanghai municipal police also were told by Japanese that they could not remove any more bodies from Japanese-occupied Hongkew, Yangtze and Wayside districts.

Withdrawal of belligerents from fringes of the international settlement eased tension among Shanghai's foreign residents. For the first time since hostilities started, crews of neutral warships were granted shore leave.

Drop Fire Bombs

Late today Japanese planes dropped incendiary bombs on parts of the Pootung area across the Whangpoo from Shanghai. Scores of Chinese houses caught fire. For a time the Soopoo company oil tanks were endangered, but Shanghai municipal fireboats extinguished the flames.

While Japanese troops launched a supreme attempt to drive the Chinese army from the outer Shanghai defense lines, 120,000 of Nippon's fighting men hammered at 225,000 Chinese on fronts along strategic railroads in north China.

A Chinese flanking movement southwest of Peking presented a threat to the 150-mile Japanese front and delayed the start of a major Japanese offensive.

Doctors attending Sir Hugh Montgomery Knatchbull-Hugessen said in mid-afternoon that the envoy was continuing a gradually slow improvement. His back was broken and his right side pierced by Japanese machine gun bullets when two Japanese planes swooped low, strafing and bombing his car.

No Transatlantic Airmail Till 1939

QUEBEC, Aug. 27.—(UP)—Regular airmail service from England to Montreal and New York will not begin until 1939 at the earliest, Sir Thomas Gardiner, director-general of the British postal services, said on arrival here yesterday.

"The test flights so far have been highly successful," he said, "but they have been made at the height of the summer season. There is still much more exploration work to be done before we can hope to fly regular airmail between England and Canada. I'll be happy if we're doing it by 1939."

Trip to Umpqua Divide Gives Scenic Panorama

The following recreational bulletin was issued today by Rogue River national forest headquarters:

"A motor trip to the Umpqua divide by way of Elk creek is suggested for this season of the year. It can be accomplished in four or five hours of driving time and gives access to heavily timbered country typical of the national forest at the higher altitudes.

"Turn left from Crater Lake highway just past the Rogue Elk resort and follow the gravelled road for a distance of 12 miles. At that point a road leads to the right to the Burt Peak lookout, and a side trip of six miles may be made to that point. The lookout station is on a 50-foot tower and offers an excellent view. The last two and one-half miles of this road are steep and narrow, but there are turnouts at short intervals and the trip may be made safely by driving carefully.

"Returning to the main Elk Creek road, continue about one and one-half miles to a sign indicating the turnoff of the Bitterlick road. Following the Bitterlick road for nine miles, climbing steadily to the summit. This road is not rough and is wide enough for cars to pass in most places; a few short stretches will require second or low gear. There is one road leading off to the right from the Bitterlick road which goes to the Buzzard mine and Woodruff Meadows, but it is narrow and steep and offers no particular interest. This road is not suggested to be included in this trip.

"The summit at the end of the Bitterlick road is on top of the divide between the Rogue river and Umpqua river watersheds, and also marks the boundary between the Rogue River and Umpqua national forests. From this point, turn north, following the directional sign to Huckleberry lake, one-fourth mile away. Here there is a meadow in what is believed to be an old lake bed and pure cold water is available on the west side of this meadow. There are many huckleberry bushes here, and, while the crop is limited this year, the berries are ripe.

"Three miles farther on, follow the sign to Abbott Butte lookout, which is a distance of three miles. This road is narrow and steep, but has numerous turnouts. This lookout station, on the Umpqua national forest, is at an elevation of 6140 feet and from here will be seen vast areas of virgin timber and many beautiful distant peaks. There are huckleberry patches along the road.

"Returning over the same three miles to the junction, follow down-grade over the McCall creek road for a distance of six miles to Woodruff Meadows and from there it is three miles to the Crater Lake highway at a point three miles south of Union Creek and 34 miles from Medford.

"The area traversed is stocked with cattle which are grazed under permits issued by the forest service and which are driven in for the summer from the valley ranches. It is also good hunting country and deer are often seen along the roads.

"No fires have occurred on the Rogue River national forest during the past ten days, although the ground cover is exceedingly dry, indicating that extreme care is being used by the unprecedented number of campers and visitors who are coming to the forest this year. Needless to say, this fact is appreciated by members of the forest service."
