UNION FROWNS ON PLAN TO OPEN UP PORTLAND MILLS

PORTLAND, Aug. 28.—(AP)—The policy committee of the Portland central labor council rejected as "unsatisfactory" today a settlement designed to open seven sawmills in the Portland area.

Charles W. Hope, regional director of the national labor relations board, said the operators and employees agreed to the truce last night.

The closure followed a jurisdictional dispute between the C.I.O. and A.F.L. Operators shut down when A.F.L. pickets appeared to protest the handling of lumber by the rival organization's members.

A.P.L. leaders have claimed the labor relations board has no jurisdiction in the controversy.
