Russia as it Is Today Uncensored Revelations in Stalin's Blood Purge

By WEBB MILLER United Press Correspondent (Copyright, 1937, by United Press)

MOSCOW, via London (uncensored), Aug. 31.—(UP)—"Our party is suffering from an attack of measles," Joseph Stalin said grimly 10 years ago. That was in the midst of his political battle with Leon Trotsky.

It might be said today that the Communist party is suffering from an attack of scarlet fever—a more serious disease, but one which shows no signs of being fatal.

Stalin is deeply involved in his most momentous internal political crisis since the great struggle with Trotsky, which resulted in the banishment of Stalin's long-hated rival and 1,500 expulsions from the party.

At least 500 persons have been shot in three months, tens of thousands arrested, and many thousands dismissed from their political posts and disgraced. The epidemic has not yet abated.

Stalin Hits First But there is every indication that Stalin, as he has done so often in the past, has craftily hid his time and struck a lightning-like first blow, smashing all potential opposition before it could seize an opportunity to coalesce effectively.

At no time during the two months of the crisis has there been any indication of popular support of the disaffected elements, either in the party, the army, or the non-party mass. Nor has there been the slightest rumor of disorder or uprising anywhere in the Soviet Union.

Laek Explanation Even cynical and cynical correspondents who have lived for years in the Soviet Union find themselves bewildered and hard pressed to discover an explanation which satisfactorily covers all ramifications of the purge.

The most reasonable guess at the underlying reason for such a general purge is that some development or combination of developments gave Stalin such a fright that he decided to "crack down" ruthlessly on all classes and kinds of potential opposition, no matter what, before it had a chance to unite.

Any regime that has lasted 20 years, especially a regime which had to resort to as many repressive measures as the bolsheviks have, is bound to make enemies. Undoubtedly there were elements hostile to Stalin within the party.

But I found nobody who believed that there was any really organized support of the Trotskyist idea that Stalin had "betrayed the revolution," although there were those who individually disagreed with the course that the revolution was taking under Stalin's leadership.

Pure Socialism Lost They felt that the revolution on many points had strayed from the line of pure socialism advocated by the original bolsheviks—such deviations as allowing peasants to hold small plots of land for gardening and feeding domestic animals. The restoration (although under almost confiscatory taxation) of the right of inheritance, the encouragement of deposits in savings banks, the protection of private incomes from work and savings, the tightening of divorce regulations and the abolition of abortion.

Charges of wrecking or sabotage, which also figure importantly in the purge, result from negligence, slackness, even ignorance, which cause the breakage of machines and the interruption of production or transport. And I know of foreign engineers with years of experience in Soviet factories who are personally convinced that there has been frequent sabotage and wrecking in factories for political reasons.

Many of the old bolsheviks caught up in the current purge had been conspirators by career all of their lives before the bolshevik revolution. It is not improbable that some had retained their taste for underground work. Every known friend of Trotsky, even friends of his friends, were rounded up.

Espionage Overdrawn Espionage is another reason for the purge. There seems not the slightest reason to doubt that foreign nations have and are maintaining spies in the Soviet Union. Every major military nation in Europe maintains spying organizations among her strongest neighbors. But certainly not everyone labeled in the Soviet as a Japanese or German spy, or as a fascist spy, was on a foreign payroll.

Anyone who recalls the epidemic of "German spies" in the United States during the World War understands what happens under the stress of war-time hysteria. The Soviet Union labors under a war-time mentality now, as it has frequently in the past, or at least during the last 20 years.

Some of the charges in the press, such as the infection of bouquets with potato cancer, the infection of cotton areas with pink worm, the poisoning of water sources and the spreading of contagious diseases among cattle, are reminiscent of war-time days in the United States.

When one comes to the case of Marshal Mikhail Tukhachevsky and several other generals of the Red army, conjecture regarding the background of their executions is complex and unsatisfactory.

Commissioners May Be Key. The key to the mystery possibly may be found in Stalin's decision in May to restore the institution of political commissars attached to large army units. The commissars are virtually spies to keep an eye on the actions of the army commanders and report directly to the political party. It was provided that every order had to be counterchecked by two of three persons—the commander, the assistant commander and the political commissar.

Any American making his career in May might be expected to object bitterly to such an arrangement. Tukhachevsky and other generals may have resented this institution and continued their resistance to a point regarded as suspicious or as a deviation from the party line. It has been known that some upper career militarists were less interested in the bolshevization of the army than in military efficiency.

A timetable of the testing-cases of Marshal Tukhachevsky's career reveals what devastating suddenness the crisis broke. In February I was assured everywhere in Moscow that in event of war the marshal, recognized as among the world's most brilliant tacticians, would command the Red armies in the field. Late in March he personally confirmed to one of my friends that he had been chosen to represent the Soviet Union at the coronation of King George VI.

Executed in Month. This appointment was cancelled later, but on May 21, Tukhachevsky stood beside Stalin in Red square, reviewing the May Day parade. Afterward with Stalin he received the army officers.

Eleven days later he unexpectedly was demoted to a provincial post. One month later he was arrested, tried hastily and shot.

As the story goes in Moscow, Tukhachevsky was arrested by subterfuge after being summoned back from the Volga, ostensibly to attend a meeting of army commanders. He was seized in the middle of the night while en route to Moscow in his private car.

Just why Stalin felt it necessary to renege the system of political commissars remains a moot point, but it is evident that he mistrusted the unwavering loyalty of certain commanders. Several of the executed generals had undergone training in Germany during the period of Russo-German friendship. It is likely that they retained certain friendships, perhaps even contacts, with German officers whose military efficiency they admired.

Aprons of this point, an incident occurred during my visit to Moscow in February which I do not pretend to understand. I heard a definite rumor that the Soviet and German general staffs had or were about to establish contact. I ignored the rumor because it seemed fantastic to believe that a casual foreigner would hear such a closely guarded secret, but again I heard it in high official circles in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

Whether or not there is any truth to the rumor or whether it was being circulated deliberately for obvious reasons, I do not know.

(Tomorrow Miller describes Stalin's precautions against assassinations.)

TRAITORS AND SPIES SOON LOSE HEADS IN CHINESE ARMY RULE

SHANGHAI, Aug. 31.—(AP)—Swift beheading was publicly prescribed — and authorized — by Chinese military authorities today for China's enemies among her own people.

Those include such persons as traitors, spies, looters, incendiaries, rumor mongers and those who harbor traitors, poison water sources, secrete munitions or signal the Japanese enemy.

The public execution, armed with a yard-long sword, put the order into effect. Others are being beheaded. Lopping off the heads of two women and seven men.

The heads were promptly placed on picket fences as a terrible warning to others.

Scores of traitors have been beheaded or imprisoned, Chinese officials said, and others are being tried in a counter-espionage campaign of nationwide scope.

A central government spokesman declared the head of the most important organized spy ring was Huan Tian, a secretary in the executive Yuan, one of the highest councils of the Nanking government. He had been beheaded.

Thing's spot, they said, gave him access to secret military information of great value to the Japanese. According to an official statement issued after his execution, Thing was bribed locally as a diplomat in the United States.

Save Tillamook Mill TILLAMOOK, Aug. 31.—(P)—Tillamook firemen blocked traffic and held up two funeral processions with 3000 feet of hose but saved the A. F. Coates sawmill when a blaze broke out under a conveyor.
