Upper Rogue Grange.

Upper Rogue Grange met August 19 with fair attendance. Plans were completed for the picnic at Casey's camp, September 5. All Grangers and prospective members are invited. Bring a full basket.

A fine spirit of cooperation was shown by a number of members donating a dollar for purchase of shades for the hall. Twelve were bought, and six more are needed. The new stage curtains were finished and will be up for the next meeting, September 2, when Eagle Point Grange officers will take the chairs and the lecturer from there will put on the program. The Upper Rogue team will do likewise at Eagle Point Grange, Tuesday, September 7.

Ten members turned out Sunday and put the first coat of paint on the hall, which improved it a lot. A number of ladies brought eats and served dinner at noon, including Sisters Maud Ditsworth, Vaughn, Axtell, Tullis, Meryl Carlton and Segesaman.

Sister Robertson called for a few minutes and is improving satisfactorily.

Attendance was small last meeting as many were called elsewhere. Mrs. Inlow and daughter of Bellview were very welcome visitors. A short business session was held and refreshments were served by the H. E. C.

MOSCOW, via London, (uncensored), Sept. 1.—(UP)—Joseph Stalin always has been the most unaccessible of the world's rulers but since the present political and industrial crisis in the Soviet union, he is seen in public even less.

While in Moscow two years ago, I caught glimpses of Stalin three times whizzing through the streets in his Lincoln sedan; but this time I could find no one who had seen him in public in the last few weeks.

"The man of steel" spends most of his time in his office and apartment behind the high walls of the Kremlin. Occasionally he visits his country home 20 miles outside the city.

Conscious of Danger

Undoubtedly he is acutely conscious of the dangers of assassination, especially since the murder of his long time friend Sergei Kirov, which proved that even Soviet chieftains of the inner ring were not safe from political assassins.

Although it was expected that Stalin would go to the railroad station to greet the first group of aviators who flew over the North Pole to America, he did not appear. The government staged a show reminiscent of New York welcomes complete with millions of scraps of paper flung from buildings (except in this case they were anti-fascist leaflets). Stalin received the fliers later at the Kremlin.

When he does emerge from the kremlin, he is guarded more carefully than any other world figure. He speeds to his country estate in a shiny new Soviet car with green glass windows and modeled on the lines of the Lincoln and Packard. The route leads over a road posted day and night with uniformed guards of the MKVD (formerly the G. P. U.) every few hundred yards. On the backs of telephone poles along the way are special telephones for quick communication. The guards jot down the number of every car passing over the road Besides those precautions the highway is patrolled constantly by cars filled with plainclothes men. Any automobile which tarries even a few minutes is immediately checked by the plainclothes men who quickly draw up alongside.

Police Careful

While traveling this road with Norman Deuel (United Press Moscow manager) we halted a couple of minutes to ascertain whether a friend, who had a blown tire, needed assistance. Within a minute an automobile loaded with detectives drew up quietly and waited until we began to move again.

Stalin's country home is closely guarded by an especially chosen band of men reputedly from the Caucasus and Georgia, whose language Stalin still speaks. Others are distributed day and night in the nearby woods and open fields. His movements are always kept secret. Even members of the inner circle never know until he actually appears whether Stalin will attend social functions and meetings

Nothing ever appears in the Soviet press concerning his personal life or that of his wife and three children According to bolshevik ideas that does not constitute news. Recently one of my Moscow friends, taking lessons from a Russian tennis instructor, gave a lift in his car to a youth who was going into town from the courts. He chatted casually with the boy, but learned only afterward from the instructor that his passenger was one of Stalin's sons.

Leads Simple Life

Of all the world's great rulers Stalin leads the simplest private life. Usually he dresses in an unadorned military-type tunic with breeches and high boots. He dislikes dainty food, and usually eats sparingly of substantial dishes, sometimes nibbling at an unsalted Caucasion roll while working at his desk. He frequently spends from 5 to 20 hours a day at his desk going through reports and conferring with associates.

The "man of steel" has few intimates, and those are usually longtime friends such as Kaganovitch, the former saddler whose sister he married, and Minister of War Voroshilov. Aside from reading, Stalin's relaxation are principally smoking his pipe and listening to his player piano. Occasionally when old friends are invited to his country home, he takes a few sips of Georgian wine. But normally he drinks little.

No Time for Novels

Much of his reading is confined to discussions of the theories of Marxism and Leninism, and books concerning industry, agriculture, and other subjects connected with his official position. He has no time for novels or light literature.

Although Stalin once indicated that lavish eulogies of himself in speeches, press, and resolutions were displeasing, since the latest purge these continual panegyrics have reached new heights of adulation without rebuke. Every speech or factory resolution is interlarded with almost Byzantine phraseology of praise for the leader.

It is generally believed that Stalin himself took the initiative in launching the present purge, especially the inclusion of everyone who previously had relations with Trotsky or Trotsky's principal supporters. But it is worthy of note that in the matter of execution of Tukhachevsky and seven other generals the normal panel of three judges was widened to include high ranking officers of the army.

The mental strain of the double crisis this year does not seem to have told visibly on Stalin. Foreigners who stood within a few score yards of him during the May Day parade in Red Square or the air demonstration in mid-August, even with glasses could not detect the slightest indication of tension. And there is no evidence that recurring rumors of his illness have any foundation.

KIN OF CLEVELAND HITS F. R. CRITICS

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—(AP)—Mrs. Susan Cleveland Yeomans, only surviving sister of Grover Cleveland, today likened the "petty criticism" of President Roosevelt to attacks made on her brother when he was in the White House.

Mrs. Yeomans, in a statement issued on the eve of her 94th birthday, pleased for "the cooperation and harmony of true statesmanship instead of political wrangling" to safeguard national recovery.

"Fair and constructive criticism is always helpful, but I resent the unfair, unjust and petty criticism of President Roosevelt," she said, "even as fifty years ago I resented the abuse often heaped upon my brother.

"The praise which he (Cleveland) now receives would have been so helpful and so encouragin, when he was trying so hard to see clearly, to plan wisely and act fearlessly."
