D. M. Lowe Uses Long-Forgotten Rust Fungus to Eradicate Wild Morning Glory—OSC Investigating

CORVALLIS, Sept. 15.—(AP)—Scientists of the Oregon State college experiment station here have started the investigation of a newly discovered rust fungus from southern Oregon which a farmer near Ashland says destroys the wild morning glory, one of the worst perennial weeds known. This unusual weed control method has been used by D. M. Lowe, Jackson county farmer, last season and this after having been first discovered two decades ago and then forgotten. Dr. F. P. McWhorter, plant pathologist of the experiment station, investigated the results on the Lowe farm recently and found that the rust spreads rapidly, finally reducing the weeds to a mass of fungus.

Tests started. The college scientists are starting

OREGON LIVESTOCK IN GOOD CONDITION SURVEY DISCLOSES

PORTLAND, Sept. 15.—(AP)—Oregon livestock is in good condition and will show promising market weights, the bureau of agricultural economics said today in its September review of range and livestock outlooks.

Summer ranges are in fair condition but rain is needed to wet down the fall pastures. Hay supplies are ample and a surplus is available. Cattle are in good shape in the Willamette valley but producers found lamb weights disappointing. Lambs are one to five pounds heavier than a year ago in the Columbia river area. Rain is especially needed in Baker county area. Cattle have made better gains than normal and the loss is about average for the season. Lamb weights are a little lighter than a year ago.

UNDERPASS PLAN SHOCKS KLAMATH

KLAMATH FALLS, Sept. 15.—(AP)—City officials today viewed with alarm the state highway commission's blueprints for a Main street underpass beneath the Southern Pacific mainline tracks, noting that the 1,000-foot cut the plans called for would entail dead-ending a number of the city's principal thoroughfares. A Main street underpass has long been a civic dream, because the street connects the city's largest residential section with its business and industrial district and the grade crossing has proved to be a constant accident hazard. Consequently there was considerable jubilation when the highway commission finally agreed to provide funds for the grade separation project.

Italian exploratory columns sent into the interior have been withdrawn, said Selassie, because of hostility of the natives who severed communications and prevented arrival of supplies.

GERMAN INTERFERENCE TO CURB BOLSHEVISM PROMISED BY HITLER

NURNBERG, Germany, Sept. 15.—(AP)—The third Reich's foreign policy was aimed today by Reichsruehrer Hitler at intervention "wherever Bolshevism appears in Europe." Such a policy, he told 16,000 cheering Nazis last night at the closing of the eight-day party congress, is dictated by the "naked necessity of sustaining the very life of the German people." The chancellor frankly admitted Germany's aid to the Spanish insurgents, and sought to justify such past and future intervention by a bread-and-butter motive based on the Reich's instinct of self-preservation. Germany has no colonial empire, he said, therefore Germany must trade with other European countries or perish. If the inroads of Bolshevism threaten that trade, he argued, Germany intends to intervene.
