Gary Cooper Heads Cast Drama of Sea On Craterian Bill

In 1842, the sailing ship "William Brown," Liverpool for Boston, was sinking in mid-Atlantic. The officers were dead. There was barely enough room in the life boats for the women and children and a few of the men. One of the passengers with master's papers took command, impressed a jury and held trial over the other men to determine on their merits who had the right to live. He was later tried in America for this trial.

From this astounding piece of American maritime history has come one of the most exciting screen adventures ever filmed, "Souls at Sea," opening a four-day run today at the Craterian theater. Gary Cooper and George Raft are co-starred, with Frances Dee, Henry Wilcoxon, Olympe Bradna and Harry Carey also featured in the large cast. Among the highlights of the film play are a roaring fire ashore in Liverpool, a bang-up fight on the deck of the sinking ship, a duel with rapiers, and some other added excitement that nature apparently overlooked in the original case.
