forces, went quickly to the scene. Then he called on Admiral Kiyoshi Hasegawa, Japanese naval commander in the Shanghai sector.

Sanitarium Hit
The Seventh Day Adventist sanitarium evacuated its patients and equipment after several bullets struck the hospital when a Japanese flyer shot at a group of Chinese soldiers and refugees at the hospital gates.

Meanwhile in Sunghiang, several miles to the west of Shanghai, the American Southern Methodist Susan B. Wilson school for girls was set fire and almost destroyed, an American's home was demolished, the Southern Methodist mission compound was damaged and its 60 occupants sought refuge in dugouts during bombardment by 20 Japanese planes.

British army authorities blockaded Koochow creek with tanks and cargo boats to forestall Japanese naval attacks on the Chinese "lost battalion" beleaguered opposite the International settlement.

British tommyes, rifles at their shoulders, paced cobblestones along the creek while two Japanese naval launches withdrew. The launches had been halted when they steamed up the stream from the Whangpoo river toward the warehouse, opposite United States marine corps lines, where the lone Chinese detachment has held off attackers since Chinese evacuation of Chapel two days ago.

When Japanese shells began falling in the vicinity of Columbia circle section in which homes of many Americans and British are located, authorities made representations to Japanese insisting that foreign interests must be protected. Large numbers of foreigners and Chinese there began quick night evacuations.
