

MOOSE CLABAUGH QUILTS BASEBALL, ON STATE FORCE

Never again will Pacific Coast league baseball fans see John William ("Moose") Clabaugh, slugging right-fielder for the Portland Beavers, belt home runs over the right field wall.

The huge Moose, after 14 years in professional baseball, has hung up his spikes and big back bat for good. From now on, Portland's most popular ball player will be in the service of the game department of the Oregon state police, a position he has cast long eyes on for two years.

Capt. Lee Bown, head of this district of the state police, announced yesterday that Clabaugh had been accepted by state officials in Salem and would serve his preliminary training period in Medford. He is in this city now, and will probably be transferred to Coquille in about three weeks on his permanent assignment.

To state it mildly, the big outfielder is tickled over his new job. "I have been interested in police work for years," Moose said yesterday, "and am highly pleased to be able to join the state police force."

Captain Bown said, "Clabaugh is a fine man. We are glad to have him with us and I am sure he will fit nicely into our organization."

After four great years with the Portland Beavers of the Coast League, Clabaugh is quitting baseball because he realizes "you can't go on forever."

"It would be only a matter of a few years more until I would be looking for something else," Moose explained. "I know I can't keep playing forever and this job is just what I've always wanted."

Clabaugh also intimated that one of his reasons for quitting baseball is the failure of President E. J. Schrieber of the Portland ball club to meet his salary demands. However, far more important was the chance to join the state police and realize a long ambition, he stated.

Four of Clabaugh's 14 years in organized baseball have been spent with the Portland Beavers—1924 to 1927, inclusive. He has been the powerhouse of the team's attack every season and was always an extremely popular player with the fans.

This year, Moose batted .327, led the club in home runs with 18, and also led the team in runs-batted-in, triples and stolen bases. In fact, since his first year in the Beavers, he has been the most dangerous hitter in the pinches, always leading in runs-batted-in and homers. He hit .306 in 1924, .342 in 1925, and .318 in 1926, Portland's pennant-winning year.

Clabaugh started his professional baseball career in 1923 with Topeka, Kan., in the Southwestern league. He was with Ardmore, Okla., in the Western association in 1924 and with Ardmore and Paris, Texas, in 1925. He was sold to Cleveland that year and was named out to Decatur, Ill., in the Three-E circuit, but after his batting slump due to a pitch cracking his elbow, he was traded to Tyler in the East Texas league.

While at Tyler, he batted 62 home runs in 119 games to lead the league in everything, a feat that brought his sale to Brooklyn in the National league, Brooklyn, figuring him not quite ready, turned him back to High Point, N. C., in the Piedmont circuit, where he led the league in everything, again. In 1928, Moose was with Jacksonville, Fla., in the Southeastern, and went so well he was sold to Mobile in the middle of the year and where he proceeded to hit .355.

In 1929, he played for Birmingham in the Southern Association and helped his team win the Dixie series from Dallas of the Texas league, stealing home twice to break up the first and seventh encounters. In 1930, he bought his own release from Birmingham and sold himself to Quincy in the Three-E circuit. He was hit .371 to lead the Southern league and repeated in 1932, batting .382; only player in history to win the batting title of that loop two years running.

He played with Baltimore in the International league in 1933, batting .347. After a deal with Atlanta, Baltimore traded him to Portland for Oms, Hawaiian outfielder, and Moose remained with the Beavers from then on.

Clabaugh is married and has two small sons. His family is living in Portland now but will move to Coquille when he is transferred to that district, he stated.
