

STARS RISE, FALL BUT EX-COLLAR AD MODEL HOLDS JOB

Neil Hamilton Is Satisfied With 20-Year Record As Leading Man in Films—Pitties Quick Fade-Outs

By Frederick C. Othman (U. P. Hollywood Correspondent.)
HOLLYWOOD, Nov. 19.—(UP)—Neil Hamilton, who left posing for collar ads 20 years ago in New York and came to Hollywood to act in the movies, reported today that he hasn't regretted a minute of his time—nor the hundreds of pounds of yellow grease paint he has smeared on his face during the last two decades.

For 15 of these 20 years he has been a leading man, the handsome fellow who takes second billing to the glamorous woman star and acts as her foil for seven reels.

He has acted in picture after picture, until his credit list in the motion picture almanac is one of the longest in the book. He's still one of the leading leading-men, has every hope to continue the same kind of job for many a year to come, and is inclined to pity the dozens of stars he has seen flare into the multi-thousand dollar salary class for a year or so, and then fade into oblivion.

Well, Othman thinks.
"I've tried to do my work as best I could," he said. "I've tried not to worry about anything, and above all, I've never sought to get out of the leading man class. I've earned good wages all the time I've been in Hollywood; I've got a nice home, a good wife, and a bank account—and I know when I'm well off."

Formal biographies of Hamilton say he was born in 1899 and that his hobbies are sailing and parlor magic.

He doesn't look 38 years old. He's bright-eyed, dark-haired and trim, like a leading man should be. And as for his hobbies, he doesn't have much time to sail or do tricks with cards, because of a philanthropy of his own devising.

Heads to Blind.
Two nights a week he spends reading to the blind men in the Soldiers' home at suburban Sawtelle. "It's a selfish kind of thing," he said. "I go to read to them because I enjoy it as much as they do, poor devils. Furthermore, it's good practice for me, as an actor."

We saw the steamship Gigantic and the steamship Colossal in a race across the Atlantic today! The "Gigantic" won.
You'll be seeing the same thing when Paramount releases W. C. Fields' newest picture, "The Big Broadcast of 1938." Most of the action takes place aboard a super-streamlined ocean greyhound, which is so modern that it gets its power from the air. The action is supposed to be taking place about 25 years from now—in 1970.

Models Are Used.
Part of the plot calls for the race between the "Gigantic" and a present liner, the "Colossal," which has three stacks belching smoke. Studios ordinarily try to keep their trick photography under cover, but since it's obvious to any fan that no studio, not even Paramount, could build a $20,000,000 streamlined ocean liner for one picture, officials don't mind letting you in on the secret.

It consists of two model boats, each about 20 feet long, costing about $7,000 and floating in a concrete pond on the studio lot. These craft operate by compressed air. A man lies flat on his stomach in each one to pull the valves which turn the propellers and thus provide a new kind of movie thrill.

FEED PROCESSING IS CO-OP VENTURE

Four Jackson county farmers have organized the Eagle Point Power Plant and Feed Processing Cooperative, near Eagle Point, under the sponsorship of the community and cooperative service section, Farm Security Administration, USDA, according to Eugene Hampton, county rehabilitation supervisor.

Facilities of a tractor and hammer mill for use on member farms will be made available and a limited number of other farmers in the community may be enabled to participate in the service. The new cooperative is set up on the master-horner plan, with members signing patronage agreements on a fee basis.

J. A. Harrison is manager of the group. Members include John Long, Edward A. Berney and A. C. Middlestedt.

LINFIELD PRESIDENT SPEAKS HERE SUNDAY

Dr. Elam J. Anderson, president of Linfield college, will speak at the evening service of the First Baptist church, Sunday. Dr. Anderson is one of the most popular speakers in the northwest. Many have read his articles as published in one of the Portland papers, and will welcome an opportunity to hear him personally and also to meet him. A cordial invitation is extended to all to be present at the service.

Ambassador III
