Herbert Marshall, Barbara Stanwyck On Rialto Program

"Breakfast for Two" co-starring Barbara Stanwyck and Herbert Marshall, is a howling success, if the audience at the Rialto theatre last night is any judge.

The theme concerns itself with a charming idler, played by Herbert Marshall, who prefers night life in a big way to that of running the affairs of a huge steamship line of which he is president, and with a rich young heiress played by Barbara Stanwyck, who tries to make a man of him.

With a sparkling Hollywood romance as its basis, Nino Martini's new vehicle, "Music for Madame," established itself as a tuneful cinematic treat with its opening yesterday as the Rialto's second feature. Joan Fontaine is featured opposite the operatic star.

The double bill will show at the Rialto through Tuesday.

Paul Muni Starring In Craterian Show

This year's foremost candidate for Academy honors is unquestionably Paul Muni. Anyone who sees "The Life of Emile Zola," which opened its local run yesterday at the new Craterian theatre, has no doubt of that fact. For Muni is Zola, shading his characterization with an artistry that enthralls the audience within its perfection, its brilliance. Where else could one possibly find a star who more merits the honor of being named as best actor of the year?

Nor is Muni alone in his brilliance. The picture itself, a biography of famed Emile Zola, is entertainment of the most desirable variety. Some taken, but so much does it enhance the entertainment of the story that few could possibly object.

The picture tells of Zola, who wrote the truth and exposed falsity and hypocrisy. His story becomes intensely interesting through Muni's superb characterization and the injection of certain incidents and events that grip the attention of the on-looker. Several chapters of the man's career are treated; two are concentrated upon. The first details the early years of Zola, years of poverty, culminated with the success of his novel "Nana." Affluence and fame follow.

Then the Dreyfus scandal explodes, an innocent officer, accused, tried, sentenced, is railroaded to Devil's Island. The perpetrators, screaming that the honor of the Army must be saved, go free temporarily. Zola, who knows the truth must be told, publishes his famous "I Accuse." Arrested for libel, Zola's trial is a travesty on justice; he is convicted, sentenced, but flees to England.

Zola's friends do not desert him. A new regime comes into power, the true circumstances are brought to light. Zola returns to France a national hero. But his hour of triumph is short and hollow.

"The Life of Emile Zola" is a motion picture that stands head and shoulders above the usual screen fare. It is the sort of film that comes rarely, with a performance, as has already been remarked, that is superb. And yet, with all the brilliance of characterization and production, "The Life of Emile Zola" is essentially film entertainment with a capital "E."

WALL ST. REPORT

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—(AP) A little support for rails brought much-needed help for the stock market in general today and early declines running to more than two points were reduced at the tail end of the session.

Aiding the carriers were intimations from Washington, coincident with the start of rate hearings, that a resumption of governmental lending to the transportation systems might be in order.

The statement of the Burlington President Burt of the Burlington said that the railroads could spend as much as $900,000,000 for improved plant and equipment in the next several years, if their credit was strengthened by adequate earnings, was a sustaining influence.

The president's housing message to congress apparently failed as a prime market stimulator, largely, it was said, because it had been discounted partly by the week-end rally.

Dealings were comparatively slow throughout, transfers approximating 1,100,000 shares.

Today's closing prices for 32 selected stocks follow:
