When the Oil Lamp was electrocuted

THE OIL BUSINESS, like ventriloquism, probably got its start off the back end of a medicine wagon. At least, we know that petroleum was first sold in this country as a medicine—good for man or beast.

But it was the oil lamp which really got the oil business under way. Back in the fifties, the forward-looking men of the oil industry had few notions beyond the supply of fuel for oil lamps—and the production of axle grease, a by-product.

The oil lamp faded before Edison's electric bulb. But Ford, Duryea, Haynes and others put life in the automobile. Gasoline—which had been thrown away as worse than useless—saved an industry which otherwise might have vanished like the mustache cup, through obsolescence.

Luckily, the industry had learned what gasoline was, although it did not dream what would be done with it. Today petroleum research spends millions to learn things it can't yet hitch to civilization's requirements. We've found it pays to reach for tomorrow.

Zuleima Temple Has Elaborate Installation

Elaborate settings heralded the formal installation of Mrs. Karl Hammerbacher as queen of Zuleima Temple, of Daughters of Nile Saturday night in Grants Pass.

Mrs. N. G. Bates of Ashland presided as toastmistress at the banquet, calling on illustrious Potentate Austin Brownell for a short talk and Past Potentate A. K. Cass. Mrs. Bates also introduced the Daughters of Nile robed chorus, singing parodies of popular songs complimenting the retiring queen, the incoming one, the patron and others of the Nile.

Mrs. R. C. Noyes of Grants Pass supervised a beautiful arrangement of flowers at the banquet tables. Centerpieces resembled a part of the Daughters of Nile emblem, with the scabbard made of yellow daffodils accompanied by white roses which formed a portion of the real emblem.

Following the banquet, the Daughters of Nile and their guests adjourned to the Masonic temple where Mrs. Hammerbacher was formally installed together with her staff, which includes: Mrs. H. B. Kellom, Medford, Princess Royal; Mrs. Earl Newby, Ashland, Princess Tirzah; Mrs. A. B. Brownell, Grants Pass, Princess Bandoura; Mrs. Kenneth R. The book "Peruvian Pageant," by author Blair Niles, was most ably reviewed by Miss Ora Cox. It is, as the name indicates, a pageant of a very colorful and picturesque country. The author begins with Peru from the time of its conquest by Spain and follows the changeful and vivid history down to the present time, including the current turbulent political career and the recent rebellions that have occurred. Miss Cox proved herself a most able narrator in selecting from the vast amount of material available, events that would depict the history and the changing fortunes of this South American republic. "Peruvian Pageant" is a book of great historical value, cleverly written and reviewed by Miss Cox in a most scholarly and pleasing manner.

The social hour which followed the meeting was in charge of Mrs. Glenn O. Taylor and her committee and was enjoyed by the club members and their guests.

Thieves broke into the Pioneer museum at Jacksonville last night, and stole a miner's tin violin, constructed from a sryup can, a silver key-wind watch, and half a handful of confederate money. A replica of the tin violin, under construction was also taken.

The museum located in the historic "U. S. Hotel," center of early day mining and political life in southern Oregon, holds scores of pioneer relics, and a check was underway to determine if any other articles were missing. Entrance was gained by breaking a window.

All the missing articles were more than 75 years old with exception of the tin fiddle model, and possessed no value save as heirlooms. Sheriff Syd I. Brown and the state
