

V FOREST WATERS HEAVILY STOCKED WITH GAME FISH

Welcome news to the army of fishermen, which numbers more than 10 percent of the population, is the record of the 1937 fish stocking, announced for the 20 national forests of Oregon and Washington.

"In Oregon national forests more than 16,800,000 fry and fingerlings were planted by state and other agencies in lakes and streams within forest boundaries. A United States forest service release states: "In addition, more than 800,000 fry and fingerlings were planted in Oregon by the U. S. forest service in less accessible waters. In Washington 5,000,000 fish were planted within the boundaries of national forests by state or other agencies and 1,800,000 by the U. S. forest service. The state hatcheries and the U. S. bureau of fisheries were the main sources of supply for stocking.

"Cutthroat, rainbow and eastern brook trout were most numerous of the species planted, though steelhead, sockeye salmon, chinook and silver salmon. Montana black spotted trout, silver trout and Loch-Leven trout also were among the species stocked.

"In Oregon the Deschutes national forest took the lead in fish stocking with 7,700,000 fish planted. The Sitkwa national forest took second place, showing 3,200,000 fingerlings planted, including a number of young chinook salmon. In Washington, the Colville national forest led in fish planting with approximately 2,000,000 fish stocked.

"A great census of fish taken in the more remote alpine lakes and streams of the Snoqualmie national forest, Washington, has aided materially in the formulation of a sound stocking program, according to E. P. Cliff, in charge of regional forest game management studies. Census cards are issued by forest officers at the time fishermen receive their camp fire permits. Each fisherman is requested to fill in his card and mail it, unsigned, giving data about fish taken, numbers, species, length and other information.

"Last year the summary of 775 of these cards showed data on 27 streams and 72 lakes with an estimated surface area of 2,200 acres. Some 960 anglers reported a total catch of 7,512 fish in the lakes, and 1,005 anglers reported 8,104 fish taken in streams. The average catch per trip reported was slightly less than 8 fish in lakes and 8 in streams.

"Allowing for failure of fishermen either to receive or to mail their cards, it was fairly assumed that the remote lakes in the Snoqualmie forest produced roughly 40,000 and the remote streams approximately 80,000 legal size trout during each of the last two seasons. From these figures as a basis the food supply in the lakes can be definitely related to the number of fish. Natural food for a greater number of fish is a problem to which the forest service, in cooperation with the United States bureau of fisheries and the state game commissions, is devoting intensive study. As a result, fish stocking in the national forests is being placed on a much more scientific basis with the promise of better sport for the angler."

Stamp Collecting Gains Popularity Here Selby's Word

Because the story behind almost every stamp is more interesting than a novel, millions of people throughout the world have become enthusiastic stamp collectors. In Medford and Rogue River valley, stamp collecting has gained increased attention in the past two weeks, because of an unusual offer now being made.

Stamps in an assortment of 15 different packets, numbering from ten triangle stamps in one to 1000 mixed foreign stamps in another, are being offered in exchange for the coupons packed in all Albers Cereals. The local Albers representative, Mr. Paul J. Selby, will redeem the coupons for the stamp assortment desired in the Mail Tribune office on May 7.

Many of the stamps appeal to collectors who specialize in particular types of stamps—ship stamps, airmail stamps, commemorative stamps or in stamps of particular countries, such as Russia, Africa, Chile or Yugoslavia.

Beside taking an interest in the story behind each stamp, collectors are always looking for the stamps of outstanding value. Many stamps become more valuable through a simple error in printing, or through an oversight on the part of the artist. Canada's first five cent airmail stamp showed a globe, with two angels flying above it—angels with only one wing apiece. An old stamp of India shows Queen Victoria in a frame which has been printed upside down. That stamp is now worth forty times more than the regular ones.

Stamps, too, often affect tremendous decisions—such as the decision to construct the canal in Panama instead of in Nicaragua. While the decision was pending a French civil engineer in Nicaragua mailed a letter to every United States senator, with a stamp showing a picture of Mount Montserrat in full eruption. The senators were taking no risks with dangerous volcanoes. Panama got the canal!

With stories like these behind each stamp, stamp collecting has become the greatest hobby in the world. Now, with the special offer being featured in Medford and Rogue River valley, collectors may obtain many stamps they would like to have—and persons who have never collected before have the opportunity of starting by owning some unusual stamps. To get the stamps, simply save the coupons in Albers Cereals, and redeem them May 7 at The Mail Tribune office.

SENIOR PLAY CAST SHOWS PROMISE IN EARLY REHEARSAL

Work has advanced rapidly on "Applesauce," Medford high senior class play to be presented in the auditorium April 27 at 8 p. m., and all members of the cast are working at top speed to produce a fine show. Having given excellent rehearsal performances in their romantic leading roles, it is generally conceded that Jeanette Field, playing the part of Hazel Robinson, lovely young heroine, and Donald Herried, in the role of Bill McAllister, male lead, will give surprisingly fine characterizations in the presentation.

The three-act comedy romance chosen by the senior class, calls for a great deal of dramatic ability on the part of the romantic leads. The plot is built around the love affair and ultimate marriage of Hazel Robinson, with the young and handsome good-for-nothing, town's playboy, Bill McAllister. Mrs. Field, popular young high school senior, plays the role with enthusiasm, with intimations of real dramatic talent. The role of the lovely young girl who sticks to her useless husband and makes a man of him is a difficult one to portray, but is well handled by Miss Field from her laughter-drawing lines to her most serious scenes.

Don Herried, another popular senior, gives a talented performance as Bill McAllister, the apparent good-for-nothing, whose philosophy of life is to "live every day as if it were your last." One of the finest scenes in the play is that part where Bill explains to Rollo Jenkins, his rival for Hazel's affections, that true happiness is not achieved by a continual flight to the grindstone. Don's performance calls for versatility and charm, and he gives unstintingly of both.

Playing the third corner of the triangle around which the plot is built is Harold Slight, versatile young dramatist, who portrays the efficient, young businessman, Rollo Jenkins, to the satisfaction of all. The role demands talent and composure, and Mr. Slight displays both in all rehearsal scenes held to date.

The three romantic leads are well supported by the remainder of the cast. Much credit is due to Miss Field, feminine lead, for her hard work and perseverance in making this year's stage play one of the finest of amateur productions, and her performance promises to be a fine display of dramatic talent. Mr. Herried and Mr. Slight have worked with the same effort, directed toward the same end of making this exhibition of high school talent as highly successful as it promises to be in all rehearsals.
