RED CROSS TOLD ACCIDENT TOLL MUCH TOO HIGH

Number Killed in U. S. Last Year Was Twice the Total of American Soldiers Killed in World War

SAN FRANCISCO, May 5.—(AP)—One of the greatest health problems confronting the American people is that of stopping the "terrible toll of avoidable accidents."

The number of persons accidentally killed in this country last year was twice the number of American soldiers killed in the world war, Chas. H. Hunt of Long Beach, Calif., said in an address prepared for today's general session of the 3000 delegates.

"This very hour," said Hunt, a past president of the California Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, "over 25,000 people have been seriously injured, 274 are dead from all causes, and there has been an economic loss of $9,500,000, and this goes on for every hour of the 24-hour day."

Deaths from accidents in the home, he said, "are as high as motor vehicle deaths."

The economic loss for accidents in the United States last year, he said, "totaled over $3,450,000,000 without taking into consideration the loss of time from work and the loss of highly trained specialists and the thousands who had priceless contributions to make to civilization."

Hunt said the American Red Cross was approaching this problem through an appeal to school children.

The Capital Parade

faculty of arousing a crowd, the ability to hold attention. There is something stage-managed about his entrances and exits, as there always is in the goings and comings of a born leader of crowds.

Bob stems from his mother, who was always old Bob's closest and best adviser. He can orate. Rather stiffly, if he has to, but he prefers to stick to an intelligent exposition of the facts. He is shrewd, rather secretive, immensely practical, with a stern public manner which belies his fondness for private god-fellowship. His mind is harder, probably better than Phil's. Phil would scarcely bother, for example, to become an expert on taxation, as Bob has. Above all, Bob La Follette has a passion for getting things done.

The combined political judgment of Bob and Phil should be excellent, for while Phil supplies the intuitive flair, Bob brings to the team the factual knowledge and tough appraising eye. And, in this case, in spite of the scorn of a good many politicians and commentators, there are deeply significant features of the situation which have passed unnoticed.

It's remarkably significant for example, that their decision to make their progressive party a national movement was to come at the start of the unkindly-named Roosevelt depression. It's equally significant that their final announcement was delayed until a long winter of governmental stagnation had passed, until the depression had been allowed to deepen disastrously while the president and his administration had muddled along. It's significant, too, that the announcement was made in the very month when the Gallup poll showed the president had lost one-third of his 10 per cent majority in four short weeks.

Ever since they reestablished the progressive party in 1934, Bob and Phil La Follette have expected the moment to come when they could fight on a front passing the frontiers of Wisconsin. In 1934, they chose to start their own party rather than join the democracy because they believed that the liberal element could not permanently dominate the democracy.

But the timing of their final announcement was determined by two things. In the first place, by last fall, the split personality of the Democratic party, and the difficulty confronting a liberal leader within the Democratic party had been pretty adequately proved. And, in the second, the new depression threatened to do to the president what the old one did to Hoover.

Liberalism has ridden in the Roosevelt chariot for so long that it is associated with Roosevelt in the popular mind. With a depression damaging the president, liberalism must find a chariot of its own. And the La Follettes believe that they have provided that chariot.

For the future of the progressive party, time must show that. The

They think that each passing month is sure to demonstrate the incapacity of the old parties to cope with a disintegrating economic system. And when that demonstration is complete, they expect the voters to turn to progressivism. They may be wrong, but their calculations are at least immensely important.

return of prosperity would probably end the movement, but the signs are that prosperity will not return very soon.
