Harassing Problems Facing Other Towns Due Mainly to Lack of Cooperation, Council Told by Mayor

Because of a general civic unity, Medford does not have the problems that harass many other cities of Oregon, Mayor C. C. Furnas told the council at its semi-monthly meeting last night.

Giving a brief report on the recent annual convention of the League of Oregon Cities which he attended at The Dalles in company with Fred W. Scheffel, city superintendent, and Frank P. Farrell, city attorney, Mayor Furnas said he was impressed by the long record of municipal problems placed on the record by representatives of other communities of the state.

"After listening for two days to this long record of city problems, I came to the conclusion that Medford was indeed fortunate," Mayor Furnas said. "In comparison with other cities, Medford really has no problems."

Harmony gratifying Mayor Furnas said it appeared to him that most of the problems had arisen in the other cities because of a lack of cooperation between the councils and civic organizations and, in some instances, because of a lack of harmony among the councilmen themselves.

"I am greatly pleased that here in Medford the city administration has the cooperation of the press, the chamber of commerce and other civic organizations and that complete harmony prevails on the council itself," the mayor said. "So long as we all pull together so harmoniously, we shall avoid many of the problems that harass other communities of Oregon."

Inspect Streets Mayor Furnas told the council of conferences he and Mr. Scheffel had in Portland with WPA officials regarding projects here and inspections they made of the Portland airport and Portland streets to learn how the metropolis handles street repairs and maintenance. The study was made in Portland after the league convention, the mayor related.

During last night's meeting an example of the cooperative spirit existing here was emphasized when Mr. Scheffel reported that since the previous meeting on the council itself, the mayor said, "So long as we all pull together so harmoniously, we shall avoid many of the problems that harass other communities of Oregon."

Sidewalks Repaired Out of a total of 303 there remain only 41 properties where the sidewalks have not been repaired and it was expected that these would be done soon, Mr. Scheffel reported. He said the cooperation of the property owners had been highly gratifying.

The council approved the sale of two lots on Newtown street south of Catherine street to Henry Buch. The sale was conditioned upon Mr. Buch's agreement to remodel a small house on the property.

Mayor Furnas referred to the streets and roads committee a petition asking for the installation of a drinking fountain on the south side of Main street between Bartlett street and Central avenue. The request was made by six business men and property owners in the vicinity. A petition asking the vacating of an alley was referred to the planning commission.

Councilmen absent last night were H. S. Deuel, W. P. Stewart and George T. Frey.

Death to Four; Escape for Three

Four men returning from a business and fishing trip died when a truck overturned Sunday on the Wapinitia cut-off near Maupin. The picture shows the overturned car and some of the bodies strewn among the lava rocks. The men were Frank Welty, Ray Metzger, Arthur Kroessky and John Wettenkamp, all employees of a freshmen implement company.

Below: Three women plunged 350 feet in this demolished car when it struck a guard rail on the Columbia river highway near Crown Point. The most seriously hurt received a broken hip. They were Mrs. J. B. Roulier of Oakland, Calif., her daughter Gwendolyn, and Mrs. Laurena Webster of Portland. Ten men had to cut a trail through the brush to reach the wreckage. (Associated Press Photos) more superhumanly virtuous than it has in the past.

The fact is that the great banking firm is regarded by the New Dealer's guiding minds as chiefly responsible for the extreme resistance of American business to New Deal policies. From the president down, the most powerful officials of the administration detest Morgan's with an all-out personal hatred. From the president down, the New Dealers are convinced, rightly or wrongly, that Morgan's has used its ramifying influences to stiffen obstruction and stir up rebellion.

Persecution complexes are as common among politicians as among financial potentates, and probably the New Dealers have given an undue weight to certain incidents.

The United Corporation's sudden refusal to register under the holding company act after it had announced its readiness to do so was one recent incident which stirred suspicion. Another was the refusal of Alfred P. Sloan of General Motors, Walter S. Clifton of United States Steel to sign the friendly statement on government-business cooperation in which John W. Hanes persuaded sixteen business leaders to join.

Sloan, Stettinius and Clifton, the heads of the three largest industrial companies in the country, are all in close relations with Morgan's. Their companies all do business with Morgan's. And the New Dealer's inferred, rightly or wrongly, that their unanimous refusal must be traced to a single source.

Again, the New Dealer's believe, rightly or wrongly, that John W. Davis, the Morgan lawyer, took the lead in rallying the utilities companies to their so-called united front against the holding company act. They point out that the financial community, for which Morgan's is the tone, and the Morgan-affiliated industrial companies have consistently taken the most intransigent position.

Men will imagine devils for themselves. It must be emphasized that there is no intention here to pass upon the good sense of the New Dealer's suspicions and beliefs. The important fact is that they exist.

At the same time, it is not only in the anti-monopoly investigation that the combat between Morgan's and the administration now threatens. By the depression, the nation's railroads have been put squarely in the New Dealer's power. By the supreme court's decision on the holding company act, the administration also rules the utilities. And these are two of Morgan's most profitable and important fields of operation. Here again, the temptation to do Morgan's disservice will be hard for the administration to resist.

Certain financial interests, which have been careful to cultivate the New Dealer's friendship, are already hoping to profit by the approaching combat. But before any predictions as to the outcome can be made, one thing should be remembered: As one New Dealer rather justly put it: "Morgan's has been investigated before, and in trouble with the government before. But they seem to be the only firm that can handle their particular job. So what can you do with them?"

Thousands of Republican voters whose first thoughts are for the security of their homes and the best interests of their State, desire to pay a tribute to Governor Charles H. Martin by casting their votes for him in Friday's primary election.

How can this be done? At the bottom of the list of Republican candidates for Governor, write in Governor Martin's name as follows:

"X MARTIN, CHARLES H."

To insure validity it will be necessary to place a cross "X" before the Governor's name as written in. Let's serve notice to the world of our appreciation of what Governor Martin has done for Oregon and its people by giving him BOTH nominations.

SENTENCE ROLLO AFTER CIVIL CASE

District Attorney Frank J. Newman said today.

No returns have been received from Washington, D. C., on Rollo's fingerprints, forwarded a week ago. Rollo, arraigned a week ago, entered a plea of guilty to seven counts, and admits eight other burglaries.

Earlier names of the Congressional Record were the Annals of Congress, Register of Debates and Congressional Globe.

LARGE TELESCOPE ON EXHIBIT HERE IS LOCAL PRODUCT

Builder of the giant telescope on exhibition at the Jackson County Chamber of Commerce is Max Bray, 25-year-old pre-medical student at the University of California and son of Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Bray of 25 North Oakdale avenue. Dr. Bray is pastor of the Main Street Methodist church.

The instrument is a ten-inch reflecting telescope of the double compound or "Cassegranian-Gregorian" type. It attains an 800-power magnification. About two years ago young Bray took a hand-ground four-inch telescope lens to the Tinsley laboratory in Berkeley, Calif., for measurement. His work was considered so exact that he was induced to work on telescopes at the laboratory while preparing to continue his college studies.

At the laboratory Bray ground and polished lenses. Then about a year ago he fell and broke his leg. While he was in the hospital he visualized plans for the ten-inch telescope which now is on exhibit here. With the exception of two small mechanical jobs, Bray did all the work required to build the telescope in its present finished form. The three mirrors of the telescope are curved to two or three millionths of an inch of the theoretically perfect curvature. The mirrors are made of pyrex to avoid distortions in their curves due to temperature changes. The telescope uses a three-inch reflector as a finder and guiding telescope for photographing the sky. Patience and skill go hand in hand in the making of such an instrument, Bray said.
