

Iverson Tells High-Lights Of Townsend Convention

By Geo. Iverson

LOS ANGELES, June 26.—(Special correspondents)—I know all of our Townsend readers are interested in what happened at the third national Townsend convention just closed here in Los Angeles.

This was the most successful convention in its accomplishments and outstanding for its lack of jangling and spilling of hot air. Most of the actual business was attended to by official and non-official committees meetings with quite a little of it cut and dried beforehand.

A large part of the convention time was given over to speaking by noted national Townsend speakers and officials, some of the latter giving their annual reports. A great deal of time was taken by demonstrations of enthusiasm, rallies of delegations and group singing of Townsend songs, program numbers, etc.

I summed up the convention effect in these words: "The greatest inspiration was the enthusiasm; its greatest result was inspiration of loyalty to the Townsend plan and its officials."

Hardly a word was said in disloyalty to Dr. Townsend nor effort made in any way to supplant him or even provide him with advisory officials; also hardly a word was said by any speaker or others as to the Townsend plan being an "old age pension."

The thought throughout being its great benefit to the young people and to business recovery.

Politically a great deal was said as to how this phase would be handled. Most effort will be put into the election of Townsend congressmen and senators. Speakers will be sent into the districts of present congressmen who are enemies to the plan, and thus by sheer weight defeat them, electing good Townsdenites in their place. These will be outstanding government affairs. Also politically, the Townsend party was officially perfected and adopted. This is now in full force here in California and will be pushed in Oregon next.

No one seems to be able to interpret the Oregon law on how to form a political party and some of them

The Capital Parade

men behind the inquiry are now talking of "British royal commissions" and the like.

As yet, of course, the only real test of the probable quality of the inquiry is the quality of the personalities involved. These augur favorably. The inquiry committee's congressional members, headed by Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming, are moderate and pretty sensible. One or two of them, like Senator King of Utah, are hard-shelled, hair-splitting Tories. As for the contingent from the executive branch—the New Dealers described here earlier this week—they are intelligent, somewhat temperamental, but reasonably disinterested and serious men.

And now comes word of the appointment of the committee's first special investigator, Thomas C. Blaisdell, Jr., who will be director of the securities and exchange commission's division of the study. Blaisdell has summed himself up neatly: "I'm a political hunchman, an ex-missionary and a friend of Rex Tugwell's, and I'm not ashamed of any of them."

Although the committee members give the direction, the special investigators hew the wood and draw the water, and Blaisdell will be charged with the most important of the special investigators' tasks—examining the uses to which the insurance companies put their huge reservoirs of capital, and inquiring into the concentration of general economic power. He has prepared for his job in 42 years of hard, varied, and not too conspicuous work, including labor at Columbia university, teaching for the Presbyterians in China and for the Y. M. C. A. in India, and ending in minor employments in the New Deal. The important point about Blaisdell is that he is not, temperamentally, a frier of anyone in his own fat.

Indeed, he approaches his new task with no preconceptions, even as to the essential wickedness of monopoly itself. The original inventors of the anti-monopoly inquiry are all deep-dyed haters of bigness, but Blaisdell is inclined to doubt the true religion. He has discussed the problem at unquotable length. But in SEC Commissioner Jerome N. Frank's new book, "Save America First," he is well summarized as believing as follows:

"It is not a self-evident proposition, nor has it been proved, that the competitive struggle is always good for those who participate in it, or that its effect on the bulk of the population is invariably praiseworthy."

One might almost say that Blaisdell begins with a predisposition in favor of big business, so long as it is subjected, to be sure, to appropriate regulations. And there, of course, is where the trouble is going to come. Predisposition or no predisposition, Blaisdell has nine chances in ten of being denounced as monstrously unfair by the united voice of all conservatives. The answer is that definitions of unfairness vary, and however the anti-monopoly inquiry is carried on, one side will call it a calm and factual investigation, while the other will describe it as a cruel, perverted and political torture chamber.

As for the plain people who will look on, they must hope that the inquiry at least will produce some reliable data to form opinions on.
