LEADER OF GRANGE TALKS ON BUYING BY COOPERATIVES

PULLMAN, Wash.—(Sp.) Continuing the discussions in the conference group on cooperative purchasing at the 14th annual American Institute of Cooperation, Ervin E. King, master of the Washington State Grange, described last week the services of the Washington Grange cooperative wholesale.

Originally organized to render a buying service for the 60-odd stores operated by the Washington Grange in 1919, the scope of its operations has gradually changed to the supplying of commodities which are most in demand by farmers and which offer greatest possibility in savings to patrons, according to Mr. King.

"The early Grange stores and warehouses supplied the needs of their many patrons in groceries, feeds, fertilizers, seeds, fuel, and in some instances dry goods," he stated. "Many of these stores discontinued as chain stores developed, the margin narrowed on many of the items handled, and credit difficulties developed.

"In 1931 the Grange cooperative wholesale first became interested in the cooperative purchase of gasoline and oils. Again a few subordinate Granges had formed buying clubs and had been buying these products to a limited extent, but no real centralized effort was put forth until the wholesale signed the first contract to furnish its members with gasoline."

The present organization, Mr. King reported, consists of 45 units in Washington and nine in northern Idaho. "Cooperative purchasing has completely revolutionized the marketing of gasoline, oils and grease to farmers in these states and Oregon, and there are farmer-controlled supply stations serving Grangers throughout the Pacific northwest," he said.

"We have continued our closed service, which requires membership in the Grange. The Grange has, as one of its primary objectives, the teaching of cooperation. Since these groups meet every two weeks, we have a golden opportunity to keep the fundamentals before the members constantly. We have found that Grange membership gives any cooperative organization a good start."

RICH MINERALS ALTER STATUS OF YUGOSLAVIA

Balkan Nation Becomes Powerful Through Industrialization — Is Turning Out Many Products Now

BELOGRADE—(UP)—The economic metamorphosis that has become apparent in Yugoslavia in the last one or two years is considered important not only for that country, but, in the light of present rearmament programs, also to all of Europe.

From an agrarian country whose economic ings for years have been advancing it to rely on livestock raising as chief pursuit, Yugoslavia is considered to have become a state with a most promising industrial future. This change was occasioned by the discovery of mining engineers that Yugoslavia is mineralogically one of Europe's richest countries.

After the results of the assays were made known, the exploitation of these mineral resources was begun with the use of French and German capital. This action was carried out with such thoroughness that today Yugoslavia already ranks third in the world production of manganese ore and fourth in the world production of bauxite. In Europe, Yugoslavian production of copper takes first place.

Iron Deposits Developed. — The enormous iron ore deposits of this country are being developed. An idea can be gained of their magnitude by citing the fact that in Ljublj mountains in Bosnia alone there are veins containing 1,000,000,000 tons lying near the surface. A year ago the German firm of Krupp built

Missing Man Found In Submerged Car

PORTLAND, July 20.—(AP)—One of the most puzzling cases of disappearance in recent years here was solved today so far as the fate of the victim was concerned when police identified a body taken from an automobile found in the Columbia river at Vancouver, Wash., as that of Fritz Burrill.

Burrill, after attending a lumber meeting in Portland several weeks ago, drove away about 2 a. m. never to be seen alive again. His friends and family expressed utter amazement at his disappearance.

Plane Construction Ahead. — Airplane construction now surpasses that of any two other Balkan countries. Yugoslavia, in short, has found itself in the position—now sought by other European nations—of having almost a self-sufficient war industry. The country now needs only to import heavy guns, and if plans for the construction of a gun factory at Zenica are brought to fruition, this defect will soon be remedied.

The production of textiles has not lagged, being trebled in the last four years. Imports of raw cotton were doubled and amount of manufactured cotton products were cut in half in the course of the last year.

Well-informed quarters have linked the scrambling of foreign capital for investment in Yugoslavia and the sudden desire evinced by certain countries for "improved economic and political relationships with Yugoslavia" with the discovery of that country's wealth in just those metals, as bauxite and manganese, which are indispensable to the manufacture of armaments.
