Every morning at eleven o'clock

MANY PEOPLE learn with surprise that the directors of the Standard Oil Company meet every business morning except Wednesday—high-hatless and in their working clothes.

This intimacy between its policy-makers and all the affairs of an intricate and far-flung organization is possible only because every director is a veteran executive of the Company. And these directors, unlike directors of many companies, engage in no outside business activities.

At 11 o'clock these ten men leave their desks and walk to the directors' room in the same San Francisco building. When they have decided on a matter they walk back to their offices and put it into immediate effect.

Because each one of them is an oil man, with oil in his blood, it follows that the company they direct must function strictly as an oil business. Like the shoemaker, it must stick to its last.

True, these directors must see to it that the Company makes money to meet its annual $38,333,394 payroll for 18,424 employees, to pay its $42,358,294 tax bill, to provide a margin of dividends for 69,969 stockholders.

This duty they fulfill in just one way—by producing petroleum, refining it and distributing its products on the most efficient possible basis. That's their line, and they stick to it.

SHAKESPEARE FETE MEMBERSHIP DRIVE OPENS IN MEDFORD

While members of the Oregon Shakespearean festival casts continued with afternoon and evening rehearsals at the Elizabethan theatre in Ashland, Medford and Ashland committees were carrying on their annual membership drive today.

Although the drive got under way here only this morning, early reports indicated an outstanding success for the campaign, said Mrs. H. Chandler Egan, Medford chairman. Numbers of memberships were obtained over the week-end in advance of the drive's formal opening, and committee members were busy contacting art and drama lovers of the valley who see in the annual Shakespearean festival a real contribution to the cultural life of Oregon.

The four plays to be presented on this year's program, August 5 to 13 are rapidly rounding into shape. With capable young actors drawn here from all over the United States to take part in the festival, this year's casts have no weak spots and in the opinion of Angus L. Bower, director, will prove the greatest artistic triumph of the festival's history.

"Hamlet," "Merchant of Venice," "Taming of the Shrew" and "Twelfth Night" will be presented.

Memberships in the association, will entitle the holder to six reserved-seat tickets to the plays. The tickets will be available soon and the membership cards may be exchanged for them for the reserved seats.
