

OFFICE USED BY EARLY GOVERNORS NOW RENTS AT $5

Newsman Occupies Historic Space—Chief Executive Has Suite Of Ten Rooms In Oregon's New Capitol.

By Robert Lodmell (United Press Staff Correspondent) SALEM (UP)—A former Oregon governor's office today is being rented for $5 a month.

The rusty old box-like office is a far cry from the present gubernatorial suite in the new $2,500,000 state capitol, which is streamlined down to the lavatory and private elevator.

Almost a century ago, however, the present $5-a-month office was one of the most modern in Salem, despite the fact that it did not have a lavatory and that the main entrance was in an alley. At that time the state paid rent of $10 a month for use of the office and other space in the building which housed the supreme court and the state library.

The office, situated on the second floor of the building which now houses the Statesman Publishing company, on the southwest corner of Commercial and Ferry streets, is being rented by Robert J. Hendricks, dean of Oregon newspapermen. He pays $5 a month rent to the Women's Christian Temperance Union which owns that portion of the building.

George L. Woods was the first governor to occupy the office. He was elected in 1866 and when the building was completed two years later, his office was moved into it. And so for two years, almost daily, Governor Woods entered the alley and walked up a flight of steps to the headquarters of Oregon.

L. F. Grover, who was elected governor in 1870, did likewise until his office was moved into the state capitol in 1876. Governor Grover collected a portion of the rent while he occupied the office as he had part ownership in the building.

Modern Adjuncts The two governors who headquartered in the office for eight years were allowed one other room in the building—that one for their private secretaries. The gubernatorial suite in the new capitol has 10 rooms, eight closets, a woman's cloak room, a lavatory and a private elevator.

Walls of the former gubernatorial office were decorated with paper, the present one is paneled in birch of Oregon myrtle. Oregon wood was present in the old office. It was Douglas fir on the floor.

After Governor Grover moved into the state capitol the office was rented to professional men and artists, later as a sleeping room.

Bain has seeped through the roof and spotted the flowery brownish-gray wall paper and cobwebs hanging in front of the three dirty windows. But the dreary atmosphere does not seem to bother Mr. Hendricks who sits amid a cluster of books and newspapers and writes of Oregon history—much of it made in the same room.

Incidentally, last May Mr. Hendricks

YOUTH IS GRANTED COURT CLEMENCY ON CHECK CHARGE

Cleo P. Burgess, 21, on parole from the Washington state prison at Walla Walla, where police records show he served one year of a 18-year sentence for second degree burglary, was extended leniency today by Circuit Judge H. D. Norton, when he appeared for sentence on a plea of guilty to passing a $17.50 spurious check on Ray Wilson, Jacksonville confectioner.

The court deferred passing of sentence pending further investigation, and to make an effort to procure a job as a skilled mechanic for Burgess. The youth told the court he had held several positions since his release in 1937, but lost them when his penitentiary blot became known. The court held "there was a chance for Burgess to be a good citizen, and not have to return to Walla Walla."

Burgess claims he was hired ten days ago by a Portland resident, to drive his auto on a vacation trip, and when they reached the Applegate district, he was discharged. The district attorney said his investigation bore out this claim. The youth has been residing in Portland. W. C. Flankus, Ashland, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses, and Carl E. Martin, Gold Hill, charged with uttering a spurious check, were each granted six months suspended sentences, with provisions to report monthly to the court.

FOREST SERVICE SAMPLES CLAIMS

Mr. Friedhoff took samples from claims recently filed on forest lands in the Union Creek district and these are to be assayed, headquarters here said. While the findings will not be conclusive, they will indicate the prospective gold wealth and the probability of profitable production should mining be undertaken, it was explained.

Mr. Friedhoff was to leave today for Portland headquarters of region 6. His office is at San Francisco of region 5.

THIEVES RANSACK SUMMER CABINS

The sheriff's office reported the summer cabins of George Lewis on Forrest creek, and Charles W. Reames on Rogue river had been robbed the past week, and there were no clues to the culprit. Blankets, a flashlight, kitchen utensils, and miscellaneous cabin effects were stolen.

The robberies were two of a series of similar crimes throughout Jackson county, the past two months. Detection is difficult due to the lapse of time between the crime and its discovery. The summer cabins are generally occupied only over the week-end, and thefts are not known until the next.

Authorities believe the stolen articles are taken for personal use rather than profit, as to date, none have been offered for sale, locally.

KLAMATH FALLS, July 29.—(AP)—Tentative plans for construction of a new Klamath county courthouse were dropped today, but the county court will seek public support for a budgetary appropriation to finance some remodeling in the present structure.

WHEAT LOANS AND LESS ACREAGE ON '39 AAA PROGRAM

CORVALLIS, (Sp)—With wheat loan rates announced almost simultaneously with wheat acreage allotments for 1939, the AAA has laid the groundwork for the wheat program for the coming year which it is hoped will materially reduce the present surplus, says N. C. Donaldson, secretary of the state AAA committee.

Farmers desirous of obtaining wheat loans are advised to contact their county committees, as clearance from the committee to show that the applicant is a cooperator under the 1938 program is the first essential in obtaining a loan. Any grower is considered a cooperator whose soil depleting acreage for 1938 does not exceed 103 percent of the soil depleting acreage allotment for his farm.

Oregon growers may store wheat on which loans are to be made either in commercial warehouses or in approved farm granaries. The county committee has charge of inspecting farm granaries to see that they are suitable. Wheat must be actually placed in a farm granary 30 days before a loan may be made on it.

A grower may find out how much he is eligible to borrow by subtracting the freight rate to Portland, plus four cents for handling charges, from the base rate of 67 cents for No. 1 wheat at Portland. No. 2 wheat takes a loan rate of two cents less and No. 3 wheat five cents less than for No. 1 wheat. The loans bear interest at four percent and become due May 31, 1939, in the case of farm-stored wheat, and seven months from date of note in case of wheat stored in public warehouses.

The new wheat acreage allotments, which aim at a national acreage of only 55 million acres next year, allow Oregon 768,303 acres, as compared with a seeded acreage this year of 1,013,000.

"The acreage allotments are especially important to the success of the farm program in view of the low features of the new farm act," says H. R. Tolley, AAA administrator. "Loans can help temporarily but unless supplies are kept in line with needs, eventually farm prices would sink under the weight of huge surpluses."
