Malayan Jungle Is Scene Rialto Film

The attack on a white man by crazed natives who kill their victims with poison-dart guns, a three-month death watch by which man-hunting savages stalk their victims, and the ritual sacrifice of a beautiful young maiden to a tiger-god, are only a few of the weird native rites brought to the screen for the first time in "Boo-Loo," which opens tomorrow at the Rialto theater.

Shirley Temple Contest Opens

Have you a Shirley Temple in your home? The number one boxoffice attraction of the screen, whose charm and winning personality have won her a firm place in the hearts of America's showgoers, has unquestionably been used for comparison with thousands of little girls. And many a proud parent sincerely believes his youngster is another Shirley.

Now, the Medford Mail Tribune and the Craterian theater are going to attempt finding the little girl in southern Oregon who most closely resembles Shirley. Singing or dancing or acting talent is not required. The only requisite is that she bears a facial resemblance to Shirley Temple. There will be three winners chosen. First prize will be $10.00, second $7.50, third $5.00. In addition, all three winners will receive a personally autographed photograph from Shirley.

The picture above is the one that will be used as a basis for comparison. All that is needed to enter is a photograph (snapshots will be accepted), with the name, age and address of the contestant. Entries may be mailed or taken to the "Shirley Temple Contest" at the Medford Mail Tribune or Craterian theater. Closing date of the contest will be the last day's showing of her new picture, "Little Miss Broadway," opening next week at the Craterian.
